China's Hesitant Hierarchy

End of Parley Without Resolving of Key Issues Hints at Caution or Differences Among Leaders

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Dec. 3—The close yesterday of the meeting of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress without any public action on several key unresolved questions seems to indicate that Peking's new leaders are not yet prepared to deal with some of the most difficult problems facing them.

The three-day session of the committee of the congress, China's nominal legislature, did not name a new prime minister to replace the current one, Hua Kuo-feng, who was elevated to Communist Party Chairman in October. Nor did it appoint a new chairman of the congress itself, a position left vacant by the death of Marshal Chu Teh in July. It also apparently did not hear any report on the economy or the delayed fifth five-year plan, as might be expected at a Standing Committee session.

Analysts here are uncertain whether this lack of action indicates that Mr. Hua is being deliberately cautious in forming his new government, or whether it reflects differences of opinion between him and his associates among the old party bureaucrats and army commanders. Whatever the case, the main purpose of the session seems to have been a limited one—to demonstrate to China's 850 million people that the new leadership is moving ahead with unity and confidence.

There were several signs that Mr. Hua did not intend the session to pass on major appointments or policy. For one thing, it was not preceded by a publicly announced meeting of the party's Central Committee, which would normally occur, since it is the party that really makes key decisions.

Key People Not Called In
Nor did Peking's new leaders even call in some senior provincial members of the congress Standing Committee, who should have attended if the session was to produce major decisions. These included two members of the Politburo, Wei Kuo-ching, the first party secretary of Kwangtung, and Saitudin, the first secretary of the Sinkiang Autonomous Region.

The session did, however, announce three actions. It dismissed Foreign Minister Chiao Kuo-hua, an urban, 68-year-old diplomat who has been accused of "opportunism" in his relations with Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, and three other disgraced Politburo members. He was replaced by Huang Hua, another experienced diplomat who until this week served as representative at the United Nations.

And the session appointed the late Prime Minister Chou En-lai's widow, Teng Yins-chao, as a deputy chairman of the congress. Miss Chao, a 73-year-old revolutionary who is immensely popular, like her late husband, seemed to bestow his stamp of approval on Mr. Hua's leadership.

Addressing yesterday's closing meeting, she said, "Chairman Hua possesses great proletarian mettle and farsightedness and tremendous courage and wisdom, and is prompt and resolute in making decisions and handles matters appropriately."

Since the arrest two months ago of the four Politburo members who are now charged with being sham leftists, Chou En-lai has been increasingly extolled in the press and is now routinely referred to as "the respected and beloved" Prime Minister Chou.

There is also mounting evidence that Mr. Hua may have been carefully groomed by Chou as his ultimate successor. It is now known, for example, that when Mr. Hua was first promoted and brought to Peking from Hunan Province in 1971 he served directly under Chou as head of the general office of the State Council.

Analysts expect his widow, Miss Teng, as deputy chairman, will now play an active role in meeting foreign visitors, thus further increasing the public attention between Chou and Mr. Hua.

Further Announcements Withheld
According to Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency, those who met also decided on "other appointments and removals," but it did not disclose what these were.

They might have included the dismissal of Chang Chun-chiao, the senior Deputy Prime Minister, who was one of the four disgraced Politburo members, as well as the ouster of several Cabinet ministers who are believed to be in trouble.

In addition to Mr. Chiao, the Foreign Minister, these are the Minister of Culture, Ya Hui-yung, a former musician close to Miss Ching, the Minister of Public Health, Liu Hsiang-ping, the mother of an official at Peking University who has been taken before mass-criticism meetings over the last few days, and the Minister of Physical Culture, Chuang Tse-tung. Mr. Chuang is a former world champion ping-pong player. Wall posters attacking Mr. Chuang appeared today outside his ministry.

Chia Action Puzzles Analysts
Analysts here are still puzzled over Mr. Chiao's removal having been made public while the other presumed changes were not. One factor might be that as Foreign Minister Mr. Chiao was an international figure and China could not afford to be without someone in that post. Another explanation might be that Mr. Chiao is not thought to be as deeply involved in the alleged crimes of the four Politburo members as some of the others. He therefore was dismissed quickly. The others would most likely be forced to submit to lengthy interrogation and criticism sessions in private before being publicly disgraced.

Poster displayed in Peking shows Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow wearing Western dress after hanging up her Mao jacket and cap. Western and Soviet books are behind her. A picture of herself and the other four members of the "antiparty gang" is on the wall. She reads a book about Empress Wu Tse-tien, a 7th century ruler well known for her promiscuity.

Chiao is not thought to be as deeply involved in the alleged crimes of the four Politburo members as some of the others. He therefore was dismissed quickly. The others would most likely be forced to submit to lengthy interrogation and criticism sessions in private before being publicly disgraced.

and his associates will hold a Central Committee meeting or party congress to finally realign the large number of senior party, army and Government officials that need to be changed, including the prime minister. Such meetings are not held until all decisions are carefully worked out beforehand and they require time to organize.

gotiate a favorable long-term accord. Since then, the bases agreements have been modified, but following the fall of Indochina to the Communists last year, Mr. Marcos made it clear that he wanted a more advantageous agreement. He was also inspired, officials said, by a $1.2 billion, five-year accord the United States signed with Spain, and a $1 billion, four-year accord signed with Turkey.

The most important facilities are Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay Naval Base. They are the largest American facilities between the Asian mainland and Hawaii and, officials said, their loss would cause repercussions in Japan and throughout Asia.

Of the $1 billion in aid, half will be in military grants and credits and half in economic assistance. Aid has been running about $100 million a year, with about $35 million in military and the rest in economic aid, including low-cost food for peace.

The bases have been in American control ever since Philippine independence in 1946 when the United States, as the departing colonial power, was able to negotiate a favorable long-term accord.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing told reporters: "I am convinced that these [industrialized] nations should jointly study the economic-monetary situation in the first six months of 1977 following major changes in the second half of this year."

The President wants the talks to be preceded by a meeting of the heads of the nine European Community nations. Several of the nine were not invited to previous recent summit talks and were clearly irritated at not being consulted beforehand.

Bonn to Pay Millions to East for Prisoner Release

By ELLEN LENTZ
Special to The New York Times
WEST BERLIN, Dec. 3—West Germany has reportedly agreed to pay millions of dollars to East Germany to obtain freedom for several hundred political prisoners by Christmas.
According to a high West German source, the agreement, which is similar to a number of others over the last 15 years, is being rushed into effect to give East Germans much-needed Western cash to buy consumer goods and special food items. The aim, the informant said, is to help the East German Government placate disaffected citizens and prevent the current wave of public restiveness from getting out of hand.
"For humanitarian reasons, we must do all we can for the people over there," the West German said.
The informant said that East Germany, besides pledging to set several hundred prisoners free, had given assurances that it would undertake no further repressive action against dissidents.

He said that the situation spoke for itself and allowed everyone "to draw his own conclusions."
In another gesture of good will, the West Berlin administration acted swiftly to return to his parents in East Berlin a 15-year-old boy who scaled the wall to flee to the West last week.
The new arrangement to free prisoners has not been made public, in accordance with an official policy to keep details of such dealings secret. But the West German Ministry for Intra-German Affairs has let it be known that in each of the last two years $42 million was spent for prisoner releases. This time the total amount was said to be somewhat higher.
Informants said the minimum price for the release of a prisoner had been set at $20,000—above last year's figure—with higher sums demanded for prisoners with special training, such as doctors or scientists.
In the last 15 years a total of about $250 million has been passed to the East.

Prominent Dissident Restricted

One prominent dissident intellectual, Prof. Robert Havemann, a 66-year-old physicist, has remained incommunicado for those in the West since he was placed under house arrest a week ago at his home outside East Berlin.
Western newsmen accredited in East Germany were called to the Foreign Ministry and warned against making contact with the scientist, who is known as one of the most outspoken critics of the East German Government. He has publicly condemned the Communists for their recent exiling of Wolf Biermann, the singer and poet and a dissident.
For some time the East Germans had accused West Germany of fomenting discontent by staging border incidents or by interfering in internal affairs through radio and television programs. One major point of contention was a special four-hour Beermann television show, put on for the benefit of the East Germans who can receive Western programs. The singer just barred from returning home to East Berlin, criticized the East German Government on the program.

El Al Joining Charter Run to U.S.

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times
JERUSALEM, Dec. 3—El Al, the Israeli national airline, will begin low-budget charter flights—its first—from Boston to Jerusalem next September.
A spokesman confirmed that El Al, which has resisted charter flights, had signed an agreement with an organization called International Weekends to run twice-weekly charters using Boeing 707 jets. The cost of package tours was estimated by nonairline sources at $500 a week per passenger, including accommodations from the East Coast, will land in Jerusalem rather than at the major airport, Ben-Gurion, which is near Tel Aviv.
First From the West Coast
The spokesman said that the airline still opposed charter flights, preferring group travel, but that it had agreed to the arrangement because it did not want to be left out. Charter flights already available originate in Scandinavia, Britain and West Germany, with many going to the southern port city of Eilat, which the Israeli Government has been developing as a tourist center.
Last month an inaugural flight chartered from the West Coast landed here after months of dispute over charter tourism on the ground that it did little for the economy because it attracted less affluent customers. The charter, which is to be carried by World Airways, will arrive every two weeks with American visitors at a cost, under current winter rates, of $900 per person for two weeks, not including meals.
The Israeli Minister of Tourism, Moshe Katsav, said 85,000 tourists were expected next year on charter flights originating in the United States, Scandinavia, West Germany and Britain—a threefold increase over 1975.
He added that because the Government had modified its policy, it was possible to attract vacationers "for whom the price of a holiday trip is the deciding factor when deciding on a visit to Israel." He also said that charter flights would aid the Government's effort to increase winter tourism, keeping hotel occupancy as high as possible.
According to Mr. Kol's office, the forecast for 1976 puts the number of tourists at over 700,000.

Lisbon Panel Accuses Leftists in Military of Torture

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times
LISBON, Dec. 3—A presidential commission accused former leftist military officials today of having committed systematic torture and arbitrary acts as well as generally cruel treatment of prisoners.
Charges appeared in an extensive report of the Commission of Inquiry Into Violence Against Prisoners Under Army Jurisdiction. The commission set up to investigate allegations of systematic torture and arbitrary acts by the military authorities in the 18 months between the overthrow of the dictatorship on April 25, 1974, and the abortive leftist rising of Nov. 25, 1975.
President Antonio Ramalho Eanes de Sa e Silva said the commission's investigation "without doubt" that a large number of military men as well as some civilians had performed acts that "constituted a flagrant affront to human rights."
The commission's report, which is being made available to the public, is a strong statement accompanying the release of the report, the President said, "which according to all evidence is a crime."
It is necessary to confirm immediately the members of the military are, as the commission's investigation indicates, unworthy to remain in ranks," General Eanes said, adding military authorities would decide the conduct of the accused and "professional and moral incapacity" of the military police of having "the worst excesses" and the dissolved military security command "largest number of arbitrary arrests, implicates civilians belonging to the Communist Party and the radical Popular Democratic Union."
These groups have already been denounced for having participated in last year's unsuccessful revolt. But it was the first time that such detailed charges of violence were made against them officially.
Municipal Elections Near
The release of the report at this time appeared to be aimed at undermining the extreme leftists, particularly the Communists, who have been waging a strong campaign for the municipal elections on Dec. 12. The commission is said to have first presented the report to the President on Aug. 13.
In its conclusions the commission listed the following principal abuses:
"Hundreds of arbitrary arrests, some on anonymous denunciation or at the request of political and trade-union organizations, in most cases without arrest warrants."
"Lengthy detentions without charges, with one person held for 17 months 'for reasons of state' and then released without explanation."
"Four cases of 'systematic torture' of prisoners in the Lisbon artillery regiment and occasional cases of torture in the military police regiment."
"Many cases of mistreatment of prisoners, specifically beatings."
"Systematic cruelty toward prisoners with the aim of humiliating them by making them crawl on the ground or kiss military insignias on the sidewalk and by housing them with cold water."
"Psychological torture, including insults, intimidation and threats to prisoners and their families."
"Deficiencies in medical assistance, resulting in the death of two prisoners and the worsening of the condition of others."
"Inadequate prison installations, particularly in the military police regiment, where 70 prisoners were held in a cell large enough for eight."
One of the cases related in the report is that of a former marine, Jose Jaime Coelho da Silva, who was kidnapped on May 15 of last year by members of the Lisbon artillery regiment on accusations of involvement in a planned coup.
He said that he had been taken to a house near Cintra and tortured for 15 hours, being subjected to beatings on his head, infrared rays in his eyes, violent blows and three hours of having to stand in a fixed position. He was taken to the general hospital under a false name and listed as having suffered a traffic accident. Later he was held three months incommunicado in the military prison of Cascais.
The commission recommends that standards of military justice be rapidly established to prevent a recurrence of the incidents described in the report.
Asks Quick Trials of Rightists
It also calls for trials pending in military courts to be held urgently, particularly of those connected with the former dictatorship's political police, known as PIDE.
Meanwhile, after more than two and a half years, the first PIDE officer was sentenced yesterday to the loss of his political rights for five years and set free.
The military court gave the PIDE brigade chief, Alberto Raul de Carvalho, a light sentence because he had "collaborated with" the Portuguese armed forces in Mozambique after the 1974 revolution.
People outside the courthouse were shocked at the lightness of the sentence, shouting "Bandit" and "Assassin" as Mr. Carvalho left the building under heavy guard.

to be as deeply incriminated as the others. He is likely to be forced to interrogate and criticize before being put to death when Mr. Hua and his associates will be finally realized in the senior party army and Government minister. Such meetings not held until all decisions worked out beforehand they require time to organize.

Occupation of Land by Peasants Is Said to Have Ended in Mexico

By ALAN RIDING
 Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 3—Some 3,500 landless peasants, who brought agricultural work to a standstill yesterday by occupying or threatening to occupy 100,000 acres of private farmland in the northwest Mexican state of Sinaloa, were persuaded to withdraw today, according to representatives of the landowners.

In a telephone interview, Victor Barrientes, manager of the Small Farmers Federation of Sinaloa, said that state officials were negotiating with peasant leaders and that farming in much of the region should resume this weekend.

To the north, in the state of Sonora, where former President Luis Echeverria Alvarez expropriated 100,000 acres of private land two weeks ago, about 1,100 peasants ended their 10-day occupation of 13 large farms last night.

Peasants Vow to Continue Campaign

But, just two days into the new Government of President José López Portillo, the situation in the Mexican countryside remains tense and confused, reflecting the new militancy of landless peasants who felt encouraged by Mr. Echeverria's controversial land expropriation almost on the eve of leaving office.

The new Minister of Agrarian Reform, Jorge Rojo Lugo, has declared that the new Government will tolerate neither illegal land invasions nor private estates larger than the law permits.

According to the principal peasant organizations, the largest concentration of illegally-large farms is in Sonora and Sinaloa and that the campaign for their expropriation and distribution to landless peasants will continue.

Yesterday's action by peasants in Sinaloa's valleys of Carrizo and El Fuerte involved invading some holdings and setting up improvised camps beside other disputed property. The presence of the peasants, some of whom were believed to be armed, forced farmers to suspend work in the fields.

In the main, these peasants were dissatisfied with an agreement worked out last week by which private farmers donated 22,000 acres of irrigated land throughout Sinaloa to landless peasants. Another 64,000 acres in the state are being claimed by the peasants, but are subject to a decision of the courts expected next week.

In Sinaloa, Mr. Barrientes said that not all occupation groups were expected to withdraw immediately, but he was confident that at least 80 percent of the invaders would respond to orders from their leaders.

The Arabs Are Ready to Discuss a West Bank State for the Palestinians

of the Arab countries and, of course, the position of Al Fatah, the guerrilla force led by Yasser Arafat, who also heads the overall Palestine Liberation Organization, is that the projected Palestinian state must be "totally independent." A statement last week, the P.L.O. said, once more rejected all thought of a West Bank state as a member of the Organization with Jordan under King Hussein.

The moderate Arab countries, these diplomats say, realize that in exchange for agreeing to a Palestinian state in the occupied territories, Israel would demand foolproof guarantees for its own security. These Arab countries also know that it would be virtually impossible to give such guarantees to Israel without bringing the new Palestinian state under the control of one or several of the moderate Arab governments, the diplomats add.

The issue thus remains unresolved. Syria, through the 30,000 troops it has in Lebanon as part of the Arab peace-keeping force and through As Sa'iq, the pro-Syrian guerrilla group, is seeking to strengthen its control over the P.L.O.

The Palestinians are resisting as best they can after having been weakened by their reverses in Lebanon. The acceptance of a state on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip was publicly announced in New York by Farouk Kaddoumi, the head of the P.L.O.'s political department. It had figured prominently already two years ago in the decisions of the Palestine National Council, the equivalent of a parliament, which met in Cairo in June 1974. At that time, however, the Palestinians argued that the West Bank state was a step toward their ultimate goal, namely a secular state in all of Palestine for both Jews and Arabs. This concept, which implies the disappearance of Israel, was put forward at the United Nations that fall by Mr. Arafat. It eclipsed their earlier acceptance of the West Bank state.

What is new now is that the Palestinians avoid all references to the secular state without, however, formally renouncing it.

Ulster Catholic Sees British Ready to Leave

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Dec. 3—A leading Roman Catholic politician and former Government minister said today that Britain had made an irreversible decision to pull out of Northern Ireland, despite protests to the contrary.

The politician, Patrick Devlin, urged Protestant and Catholic politicians to re-examine their positions and look seriously at negotiated independence for the British province.

He said that unless talks began—possibly involving representatives of paramilitary groups in the region—the paramilitary groups would use violence to produce their own settlement.

Mr. Devlin, who was chief whip, for the mainly Catholic Social Democratic and Labor Party in the now-defunct Northern Ireland Convention and served as Minister of Health in the short-lived power-sharing executive in 1974, is the most influential politician so far to endorse negotiated independence, which conflicts with the official party line. The party is strongly committed to a shared Government with Protestants, although its overtures have consistently been rejected.

It is regarded as significant here that Mr. Devlin did not rule out from any talks the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army or Protestant paramilitary groups, both of which have shown interest recently in an independent solution.

Mr. Devlin cited the closing down of factories controlled by the British Government and the exclusion of Northern Ireland industries from British nationalization plans as ample evidence that the London authorities intended to withdraw from the province.

English Relics Falling Victim To the Ills of Modern Society

sponsibility for national conservation, said yesterday. "We have reached the moment of decision for Stonehenge. Either we protect it, or we continue to allow people to trample over the site and leave posterity to look after itself. "I am not prepared to consider the latter alternative," Baroness Birk said.

Enormous Number of Visitors
The restriction has been made necessary, according to conservation officials, because of the enormous number of people who now visit Stonehenge and who have been wearing away and chipping away at the prehistoric stones.

Stonehenge is Britain's second most popular tourist attraction after the Tower of London. Last year it was visited by an estimated 670,000 people, who, according to the conservationists, have trampled the site to mud and have eroded the site to such an extent that a grit and gravel surface put down a year ago has been obliterated.

The bluestones that form part of the mysterious monument were hauled nearly 200 miles to Salisbury Plain from mountains in Pembrokeshire about 35 centuries ago. They are soft and show signs of wear.

Some of the incised carvings of bronze axe blades and other symbols have been rubbed away by careless feet and curious fingers, by souvenir seekers who have dug into the stone and chipped pieces off.

In addition, the heavy tourist traffic to Stonehenge has necessitated construction of a road that intrudes upon the aesthetics of the site.

Surrounding Burial Culture
The neolithic earthwork that preceded Stonehenge; and other related barrows and monuments of the surrounding Wessex burial culture are separated from the monument by this road. Ideally, it is felt that the entire monument should be viewed as an historic whole.

So the Government will restrict tourist intrusion upon the monument. It will create a more sophisticated road network, leading to parking areas that do not intrude upon the Stonehenge site. It will install audio-visual displays explaining the convoluted archeology and history of Stonehenge. And it will insure that visitors will approach the monument via different paths and view it from a suitable distance—from behind the picket fence.

Bath's problem is not as complex. It is being closed simply because there is not enough money to keep it open.

The first baths at Bath were built by Roman soldiers of the 20th Legion to hold the hot springs waters they found in a settlement that they named Aquae.

The New York Times/Dec. 4, 1976

Sulis, after Sul, a local deity identified with the goddess of health and cleanliness.

When the Romans left, the Britons renamed the springs Bath and by the 18th century had built the town around them. It was a town that catered to fashionable Englishmen, with dandies flocking there to bathe, dance, gamble and recover from hangovers by drinking the metallic-tasting waters, which are said to contain 38 different minerals. Only lately has it been determined that one of these minerals is a radioactive gas called Radon.

In the 18th century a Hot Springs Treatment Center was built and hundreds of thousands of Britons were treated there. Rheumatics came to "take the baths," either immersing themselves in the waters or lounging in the ornate "Pump Room" listening to the orchestra and sipping the mineral water pumped up from the springs.

Since the end of World War II, the National Health Service has run the Hot Springs Treatment Center in conjunction with the Bath City Council. The original Roman baths nearby have been open for visiting but not for bathing.

The center, however, has proven too expensive to maintain. According to Social Services Secretary David Ennals, who rejected appeals to keep the center open, "Although the treatment center is maybe a national asset from an historical point of view, my department could not justify either lessening the center or acquiring it, since there is no clinical evidence that hydrotherapy using spa water has greater therapeutic merit than hydrotherapy using tap water."

And so a new hospital on the outskirts of Bath—with a great deal of tap water in its pool—will do just nicely, and be cheaper, than the baths at Bath, Mr. Ennals said.

But Bath has not given up. Although the baths have been losing $165,000 a year the town wants to keep them. A Bath Spa Trust has been formed and is appealing for donations of $411,000 to renovate the center and the baths and open them as a private spa.

British Laborites Suffer New By-election Defeat, Reducing Majority to One

CAMBRIDGE, England, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Britain's opposition Conservative Party won a by-election here today, reducing the Labor Government's effective majority in the House of Commons to one.

Conservative Robert Rhodes James was elected in a 10 percent swing to the opposition. Last month, Labor lost two of three by-elections—defeats that were attributed to disenchantment with the party's left-wing policies and its failure to cure Britain's economic ills.

The Cambridge seat was previously held by a Conservative. In the 1974 general election the Conservative candidate was elected with a majority of 2,773 votes. Mr. James's majority today was 9,825 votes.

But the move to the right was well below the average 16 percent swing in the November by-elections.

The Labor candidate, Martin Smith, aged 25, finished second and the Liberal Party came third.

The combined opposition to the Labor Party's 316 votes in the House of Commons now rises to 315, providing further problems for the party's floor managers, who on occasion have had to call in traveling and sick members to make up the majority.

Former Stanford Professor
But the opposition groups rarely combine and it is expected that the Government will survive with ease all but the most crucial votes.

Mr. James is a former professor at Stanford University in the United States. He returned to fight the election after three years as executive assistant to Secretary General Kurt Waldheim at the United Nations because of what he described as "a mounting sense of anger and humiliation about what was going on in one's country."

CASTRO NAMED PRESIDENT OF CUBAN STATE COUNCIL

MIAMI, Dec. 3 (AP)—Fidel Castro was named president of Cuba's Council of State today, according to a Havana broadcast. It was not known whether he would retain the title of Prime Minister he has held since taking power Jan. 1, 1959, after a bloody revolution.

The broadcast, monitored in Miami, did not use that term in identifying him. It said Mr. Castro would be the "supreme power of the nation."

The announcement came during the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the revolution. The newly elected National Assembly, comprising 481 deputies representing the 14 Cuban provinces, held its inaugural session yesterday.

Mr. Castro said that the National Assembly would end the revolutionary process and would institute the Cuban socialist state.

He said in a speech to the assembly yesterday that some third-world oil-producing countries were using their petroleum exports to enrich or arm themselves when they could be doing more for other developing nations.

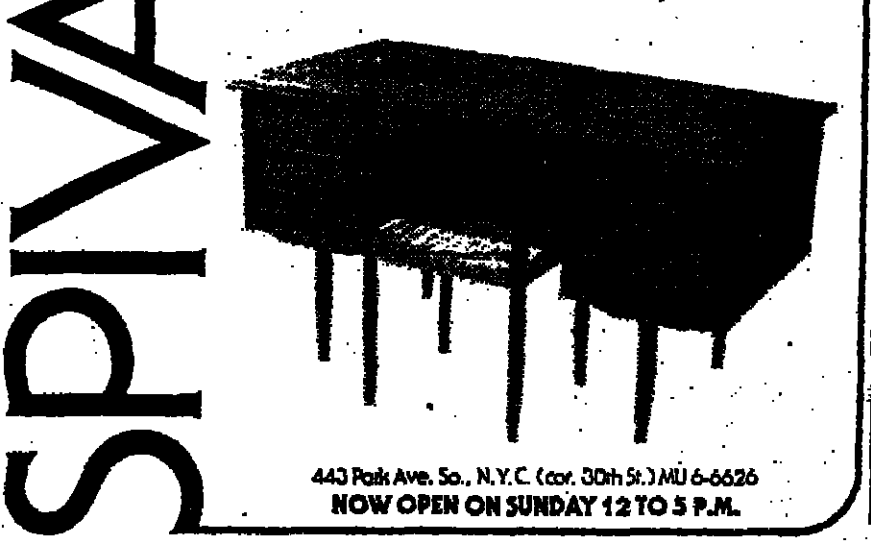

Fiat Says Relations With Israel Won't Be Changed by Libyan Role

TEL AVIV, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Italy's Fiat car company has assured Israel that Libya's purchase of 10 percent of the company will not affect Fiat's relations with Israel, the newspaper Maariv reported today.

The paper said Giovanni Agnelli, chairman of the Israeli Ambassador in Rome, Yisrael Sasson, to give him this assurance. Fiat's popular cars in Israel. Defense sources said they are also purchased for use by officers but not for other military purposes.

World News Briefs

Police in South Africa Conduct Sweep of Blacks
 CAPE TOWN, Dec. 3 (AP)—The police arrested 120 people today in sweeps through the Guguletu and Nyanga black townships outside Cape Town, bringing to nearly 300 the number jailed after two nights of riots and arson.

About 600 riot policemen, detectives and uniformed officers continued what a spokesman called a "cleanup" to flush out leaders of the disturbances, in which the police killed two men.

The segregated townships were reported quiet.

Elsewhere in Cape Province, gasoline bombs were thrown into the office of a bus company and two explosions wrecked an office building and shop in a suburb for coloreds, as persons of mixed race in South Africa are called.

Europeans Agree on Steps To Clean Polluted Rhine
 BONN, Dec. 3 (AP)—The European Economic Community and countries bordering the Rhine signed three treaties today in a first step to clean up the waters of the busy West European river.

The West German Associations for Water Economy and Supply called the treaties "insufficient and not leading to the hope that the Rhine will get any cleaner."

The first treaty aims to rid the river of chloride from the French Government's potash mines in Alsace. The main purpose of a second treaty is to keep chemical wastes flowing into the river to a minimum. It calls for coordinated legislation and specifications. A third provides for the E.E.C. to join the International Commission for the Protection of the Rhine.

Italy's Major Parties Back Revising of Vatican Ties
 ROME, Dec. 3 (AP)—All major parties in the Italian Parliament today agreed to the Christian Democratic Government's proposals to eliminate Roman Catholicism as the state religion, make religious education voluntary and allow de-frocked priests to hold state posts.

The vote of 412 to 31 came on a motion by the Christian Democrats to continue negotiating with the Vatican on revising the 1929 concordat signed by Mussolini and the church.

The Communists, Socialists, Social Democrats and republicans said more radical revisions might be required, but agreed to use the Government proposals as a starting point for revising the compact.

Members of the neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement voted against, saying there were internal contradictions in the Government proposals. Three other small parties, the leftist Radicals and Democratic Proletarians and the conservative Liberals insisted the concordat should be abolished.

U.N. Aide Chides Thailand For Driving Out Refugees
 Special to The New York Times
 GENEVA, Dec. 3—The United Nations high commissioner for refugees rebuked the Thai Government today for having forcibly returned 26 Cambodians to the homeland they had fled to escape Communist rule. According to one report the refugees were immediately executed.

A "very stiff" note of protest from the high commissioner, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, was delivered to the Thai diplomatic mission here, a refugee source said. The high commissioner recalled in the note that Thailand had subscribed in a joint communique with his office to the principle enshrined in the 1975 United Nations declaration on territorial asylum that anyone seeking refuge would not be forcibly returned to the country he had fled.

Thai authorities said at the time that the refugees had been expelled because they were spies and a threat to national security.

THIS SUIT AT FINE STORES NATIONWIDE $260 AT THE NEW YORK MANUFACTURER $149

Less than one year ago, Saint Laurie, a fine men's clothing manufacturer for 63 years, introduced a unique selling concept in New York.

What started as a gratifying response, has built into an ever growing legion of extraordinarily dressed, true believers.

The concept is simple: Saint Laurie sells their exquisitely tailored classic American and European cut suits to the most expensive stores throughout the country.

They will continue to sell to stores in New York, but not under the Saint Laurie label, and offer their vast collection (over 25,000 suits) direct to the consumer.

Nothing like Saint Laurie exists in New York. To our knowledge, anywhere.

The enormous selection, impeccable tailoring, costliest fabrics with the prices at the factory ranging from $115 to $210, turns the most critical shopper into a delighted customer.

If smashing suits are important to your business or personal life and you've been spending $275 to $300 for them at better stores, come to Saint Laurie and see what feeling and looking good is all about.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 3—Two apparent attempts to prevent a guilty verdict by trying to bribe one or more jurors in the political corruption trial of Gov. Martin Mandel of Maryland and four of his friends and business associates were confirmed today by the partial release of sealed court papers. Two men have been arrested; one of them was later released.

Barney D. Skolnik, the Assistant United States Attorney who is the chief prosecutor in the Mandel case, told newsmen today: "The investigation to date has disclosed no evidence that any of the five men now on trial was involved in either of the two attempted obstructions of justice."

Officials declined to comment on the possible motives of any other persons in seeking to influence the jury.

Unusual security continued to surround both the Mandel jury and the Federal investigation of the jury-tampering incidents. Mr. Skolnik said that further arrests were "possible."

The court documents were placed on public file in the clerk's office at the United States District Court here without the detailed supporting affidavits of Federal investigators. They confirmed in sketchy form that one man, a 67-year-old Baltimore furniture salesman, was under arrest and being held under high bail on charges of offering $10,000 to a Mandel juror to guarantee a verdict of not guilty. The juror has been excused and replaced by an alternate.

The unanimous ballot of 12 voting jurors is required to obtain a guilty verdict. The Mandel jury is still weeks or months away from beginning its deliberations, but published reports of the jury-fixing attempts have already led to demands by the defendants' lawyers for a mistrial.

Until Wednesday night, when Judge

Pratt abruptly ordered United States marshals to pick up the jurors at their homes and sequester them at the Lord Baltimore Hotel here, they had been free to go home each night since the trial began on Sept. 8.

The suspect, who is being held under $400,000 bail in the Harford County jail at Bel Air, just outside Baltimore, was identified as Walter Weikers, a German-born salesman for a cut-rate furniture chain. Details of his arrest on Tuesday remain sealed under orders of the judge because the investigation of the episode is still continuing, according to a Federal prosecutor.

Mr. Weikers, a relative by marriage of one of the excused jurors, Oscar Sisen, is reportedly accused of approaching Mr. Sisen with a jury-fixing offer during the Thanksgiving weekend. In the court papers, Mr. Weikers is charged with obstructing justice.

Reportedly, Mr. Sisen, a 56-year-old limousine chauffeur from Bethesda, Md., just outside Washington, reported the alleged bribe offer to Judge Pratt on Monday.

day. Mr. Sisen was then reportedly equipped by Federal agents with a concealed recording device and met the suspect on Tuesday. The arrest was made at the scene.

Broadcast Reports of Arrest

The first broadcast reports of the incident occurred Wednesday afternoon. Judge Pratt then sought to secure the jurors from knowledge of the episode and thus avoid a mistrial.

Robert Fradkin, Mr. Weikers's employer since 1969 at Fradkin Brothers Furniture Village, said that Mr. Weikers was absent from work this week, "because he said he was flying to Israel to see his brother who is sick." The suspect was scheduled to have a hearing on a motion for a reduction of his bail at 5 P.M. Monday.

The court papers made public today also confirmed, again without details, a separate apparent jury-tampering incident.

A man identified in the court documents as Charles E. Neiswender, alias Lee Anderson, of Cinnaminson, N.J., was arrested on Nov. 5, reportedly after telephoning Mr. Mandel's lawyer here, Arnold M. Weimer, with an offer to guarantee that the Governor would not be convicted.

Court records show, without explanation, that the charge of obstructing justice against Mr. Neiswender was dismissed before Judge Pratt in a closed hearing in his chambers on Nov. 15, after the accused had been held in jail here for 10 days under bond of $1 million.

The chief prosecutor would not comment directly today on courthouse speculation that a case against Mr. Neiswender had been dropped, for the time being, because the Government had wished to avoid the publicity that it now must deal with if Mr. Neiswender might still be "subject to further action," Mr. Skolnik said that the answer was "absolutely."

Mr. Neiswender, whose phone number in New Jersey is unlisted, could not be reached for comment. His lawyer here, J. Frederick Motz, said he would have to further action," Mr. Skolnik said, "Absolutely."

Toledo Schools Close Early For Lack of Money

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 3 (AP)—Toledo public schools closed for the year today for lack of money, sending 56,000 children home on early vacation until Jan. 3.

For the third time in a year, voters refused in November to approve a tax increase to pay the school system's bills, and that meant 13 extra days for the regular winter holiday.

"Thirteen days is peanuts," said Dr. Robert Jackson, president of the city board of education. "But it is just a harbinger of things to come."

Classes will be made up by eliminating the spring vacation in April and by postponing the final day of school to June 24, 10 days later than planned.

School administrators acknowledged that closing the schools now would mean more problems in 1977 if additional money was not found. They already estimate a deficit of $8 million to $10 million for next year, a situation they say would force the schools to close in October, a month after they opened.

Martin W. Essex, Ohio's superintendent of public instruction, approved the early closing in Toledo as well as in six other districts. About 70,000 students in Ohio are out of school now because their districts ran out of money.

Voters in Toledo, in northwestern Ohio with a population of 383,000, rejected a 2.7-mill tax increase on the Nov. 2 ballot. In June 1975 and November 1975, voters rejected proposed tax increases of 7.5 mills. The current school tax is 29.5 mills. A mill is one-tenth of one cent, and 29.5 mills equals $29.50 in tax per $1,000 of assessed value of property.

Boston 'Combat Zone' Becomes Target of Police Crackdown

Adult Entertainment Area Center of Dispute After Outbreak of Violence

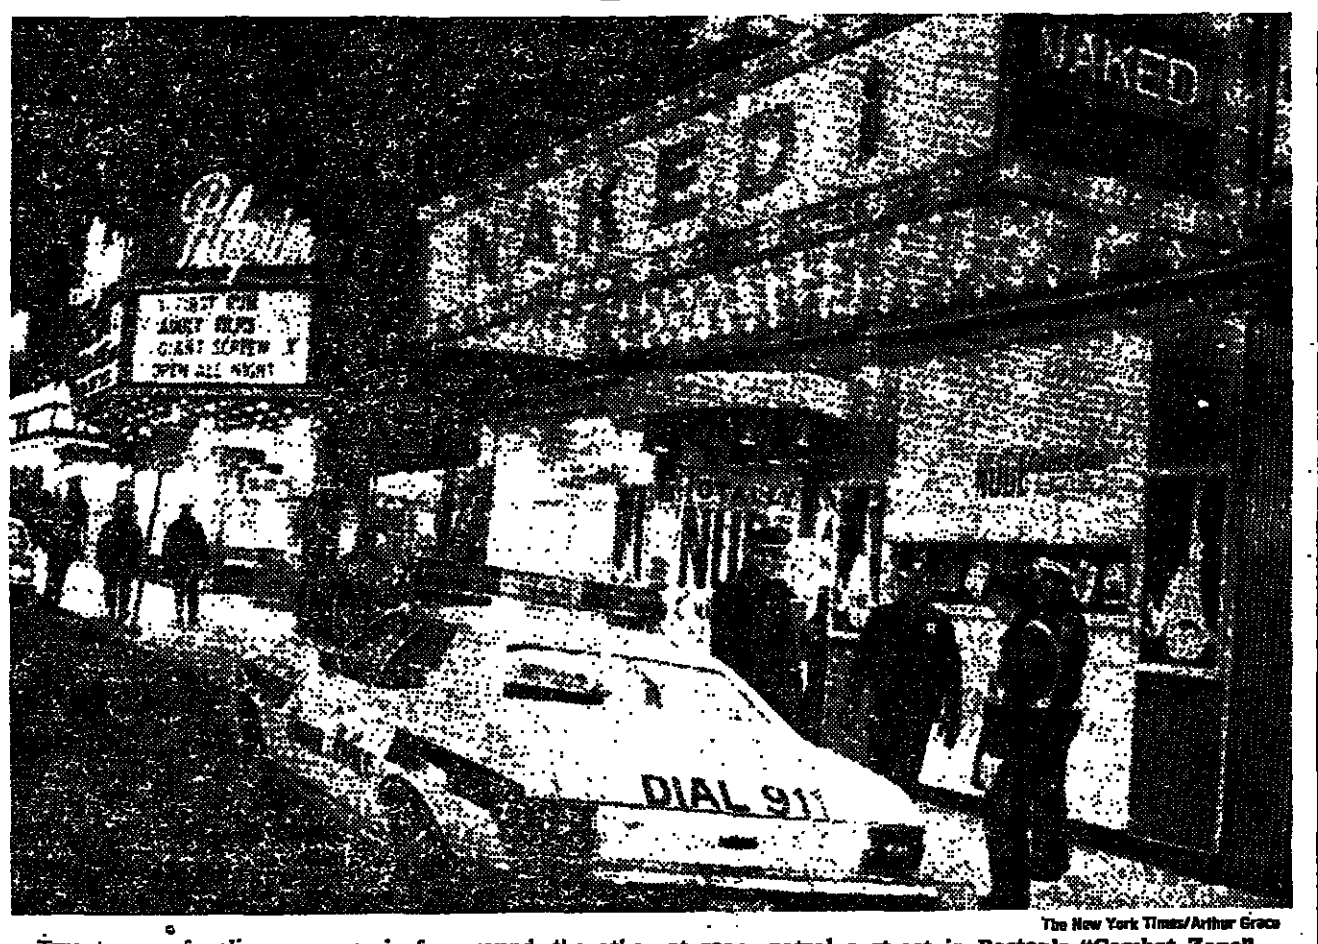

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, Dec. 3—An "adult entertainment district" established by city officials here two years ago has become the subject of a sudden, swift police crackdown.

The district, composed of two sleazy downtown blocks, was established to keep X-rated movies, strip tease bars and other pornographic establishments from spreading throughout the city. There was an attempt to call the district the "Liberty Tree Neighborhood," but it has become known across the nation as the "Combat Zone."

The current furor was caused by two developments. The first was the release of an internal police report charging widespread "incompetence and corruption" in the downtown police district that includes the Combat Zone. The second was the stabbing of two Harvard football players during an excursion to the area.

Now the Combat Zone has been saturated with policemen. Tactical Patrol Force members stand outside the doors of the strip joints. Vice squad detectives roam the streets. The sidewalks, normally the haunt of bands of women in platform shoes and short skirts, are empty.

Two teams of policemen—one in foreground, the other at rear—patrol a street in Boston's "Combat Zone."

Move Called a Failure

On Monday, declaring the attempt to isolate the sexual activity a failure, Police Commissioner Joseph M. Jordan and county prosecutors met to plan a new crackdown, using the liquor laws and the District Attorney's major violators unit, set up last spring to deal with racial violence.

The concept behind Boston's zone, which clustered the X-rated businesses together, is somewhat different from the zoning being proposed in New York City, which attempts to keep the activity away from residential neighborhoods and spread it out.

The Boston area is filled with strip tease bars, many of them, according to their neon marquees, "world famous." X-rated movie houses, photo galleries in book stores selling various devices, including life-sized inflatable dolls.

In the bars, not much darker than a coal mine, the strippers ask the customers to buy them drinks, offering their company and the real or imagined possibility of further activity. Such mingling is against the state liquor laws, and the police say that there are men outside the bars with buttons to flick the lights in warning when inspectors come. The favorite drinks, usually costing $6 or $8, purports to be vodka and grapefruit juice. It needs refilling quickly.

In the early days of the zone's legitimacy, there was a good deal of talk about new lights and more tasteful exteriors. Trees were planted in a small park.

But the Combat Zone and Park Square a few blocks away also became more and more notable for bands of prostitutes. Now, the police say, there are also groups of female muggers working the district.

There is a strong sense of "anything goes" in the area and a tacit understanding that the police were to direct their law enforcement efforts outside the zone.

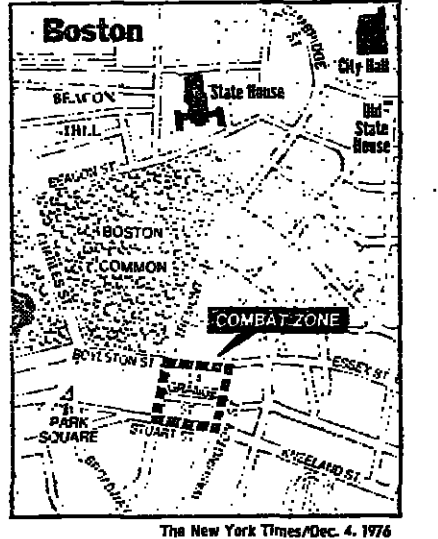

But in early November, just before leaving for a new job in suburban Maryland, then-Police Commissioner Robert J. DiGrazia released a 572-page report of his Special Investigation Unit charging that among other acts of "obvious gross incompetence" and "corrupt inattention" the police in the downtown District 1 had ignored rampant illegal sexual activity in the Combat Zone.

The report, which Mr. DiGrazia described as a "management tool," charged that there was widespread bookmaking and that criminals were sometimes warned of investigations. The police themselves, the report complained, triple-parked their private cars outside the police station.

The district commander, the report said, had personally directed traffic and provided a police motorcycle escort at the funeral in the Italian North End section of the mother of a reputed Mafia leader, Genaro Angiola.

The heat was on the police, who began to put it in turn on the Combat Zone. But even as a new internal investigating unit was announced there were more developments.

The Harvard football team was hav-

The police began to saturate the area. The Herald American, a Hearst paper, wrote that the "city responded with a shudder," and began extensive coverage of the juicy Combat Zone story.

The police reported an unexpected victim that Friday night. An off-duty state trooper, Donald Gould, who had spent the evening in the area, was knocked down in a fight in a small coffee shop. The police took him to a nearby hospital, over his protest. But the 22-year state police veteran, the father of seven, jumped off the operating room table, refused to give his name and ran into the night, where he died of a heart attack.

Meanwhile, representatives of a prostitutes' union held a news conference to complain that the female muggers were giving the legitimate prostitutes a bad name. Debra Beckerman, the public relations agent for the Combat Zone, said that some of the women on the street had become "robber baron females" and called a news conference to charge that the situation was the fault of the police. There were complaints that the prostitutes had been driven into the nearby, fashionable Back Bay section.

Business was supposed to be down in the Combat Zone, but a visitor one recent night found the bars crowded with men in windbreakers and men in business shirts staring through the cigarette smoke at the naked dancers. A rapid succession of women asked if they might share a drink, including one who said she danced with a 10-foot box constrictor.

"It doesn't bother me," she explained. "I've been around reptiles all my life."

ACCORD IS ANNOUNCED IN PARCEL WALKOUT

But 10-Week Strike Won't End Until Agreement Is Ratified by 18,000 in 15 Northeastern States

By LEE DENBRANT

A tentative settlement in the 74-day strike against United Parcel Service was announced yesterday in Washington, but the 18,000 warehousemen and drivers were not expected to return to their jobs for at least another week, pending ratification.

The walkout in 15 Eastern states, not including New York City and Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester and Putnam Counties, has snarled package deliveries for consumers and businesses and forced the Postal Service to hire more than 6,000 people to handle the avalanche of parcel post.

"If and when ratification of the agreement occurs, we will resume operations in the 15 states as soon as possible," said a spokesman for United Parcel, who conceded that Christmas deliveries would be hampered in any case.

The tentative agreement was announced by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, whose negotiators, led by the union's president, Frank E. Fitzsimmons, met through the night with negotiators for United Parcel.

The union said that the proposal would be submitted to the 25-member negotiating committee on Monday in Washington and then to representatives of the 74 striking locals on Tuesday.

From there it will go to rank-and-file ratification, but the teamsters would not say whether that would take place by mail ballot or in local union meetings. A teamster spokesman said that that decision would be made at the Monday and Tuesday meetings.

The teamsters also said that details of the agreement would not be made public until it had been submitted to the members. Wages have not been an issue in the strike. The company had reportedly agreed early on to match the economic terms of the teamsters' national master freight agreement, which would give the parcel workers a 33 percent raise over a three-year contract. Wages currently average $7 an hour.

The central issue had been the company's desire to have freedom to replace full-time workers with part-time workers, and there were other issues relating to the relationship between full-time and part-time employees.

A settlement to the strike had reportedly been reached three weeks ago, but that agreement was blocked, and negotiators returned to the bargaining table. The walkout has halted United Parcel operations from Maine to the Carolinas except in New York City and the four nearby counties, where the local contract does not expire until June 30.

In a related development yesterday, it was disclosed that the teamsters' union had agreed to pay the strikers an additional $10 a week in strike benefits. The ratification is to start of the walkout.

60 Are Arrested in Indiana In Stolen Goods Ring

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Dec. 3 (UPI)—More than 100 thieves in a three-state area believed for nine months that they had a safe "heaven" where they could store stolen goods, until the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the local authorities began arresting them today.

Undercover agents had bought nearly $1 million worth of stolen goods at South Bend warehouse they called SP, Inc. (for Stolen Property Depository) and known as "The Place" among thieves.

More than 400 buys from 160 persons were secretly videotaped and sound recorded, the authorities said.

Arrests began before dawn. By noon about 60 persons, among 89 named in warrants, had been apprehended and were being processed at a National Guard center set up just for them. They were taken by police wagons to jails in courts.

The authorities hoped to return to victims and insurance companies more than 90 percent of the loot, which ranged from credit cards and hospital equipment to vehicles and electronic gear.

By Burning to Be Tested

CLEVELAND, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Tests will begin next month on how to destroy about 100,000 pounds of Kepone, a pesticide that polluted the James River in Virginia and injured 30 workers who helped manufacture it. The chemical used in highly diluted form to kill the Colorado potato beetle, ants and roaches.

The Midland-Ross Corporation, Cleveland, which last month signed a $200,000 contract with Virginia's bureau of sanitary engineering to develop nonpolluting ways to dispose of the pesticide, said that it planned to burn it.

"A small quantity of Kepone, about 15 pounds, will be disposed of at extremely high temperatures in a series of controlled tests at our surface combustion laboratory in Toledo beginning Jan. 10," John Morehouse, a Midland-Ross spokesman, said.

"Testing will continue for four weeks," he added. Samples will be heated to about 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit. The residue, he said, would consist of water vapor, carbon dioxide, nitrogen and common table salt.

U.S. Sets $825 Million For Transit on Coast

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Robert E. Patricelli has indicated that the Federal Transportation Department is ready to allocate more than $825 million to help finance a $1 billion regional transportation program.

Mr. Patricelli, the mass transportation chief, said yesterday that the money was for construction of more preferential freeway lanes and freeway on-ramp bypasses, the purchase of up to 500 more park-and-ride lots.

He said that Federal officials were less likely to grant money for two other local projects—development of a 2.75-mile downtown people-mover or construction of a 15-mile mass transit starter line from the San Fernando Valley to downtown Los Angeles along the Wilshire Corridor.

Auto Union Delays Decision on Return To the Federation

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—Leaders of the United Automobile Workers reached no decision on whether to return to the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations after a meeting today with George Meany, president of the federation.

The auto union, which has 1.4 million members, broke away from the federation in 1968 because of basic differences between Mr. Meany and the union's leader, the late Walter P. Reuther.

Leonard Woodcock, the auto union president, told reporters after today's meeting that "we came to no conclusions."

Mr. Woodcock said in reply to a question, "If reaffiliation comes, that I guess we can say that after this we're one day closer."

A federation official said that the decision as to whether to reaffiliate was tentatively up to the U.A.W. "They left of their own accord and they can come back at any time," he added.

Internal Union Politics a Factor

Observers of organized labor expressed belief that there was still a good chance the auto workers will rejoin the federation next May when the union holds its convention. Internal union politics are believed to be blocking reaffiliation as much as unresolved differences with the federation.

Mr. Woodcock, who is 65 years old, is retiring in May. There are several candidates trying to succeed him, and the question of reaffiliation is considered a likely issue in the contest for the union leadership.

Another obstacle is money. The union would have to pay per-capita dues if it rejoined the federation. The total could amount to about $2 million a year, a substantial bite out of the union's treasury, especially after the economic hardships it suffered in the recent recession.

Earl Mezey, the U.A.W. secretary-treasurer who also attended the meeting at the A.F.L.-C.I.O. headquarters here, said later that the conditions that had led to the departure of the union had not been corrected and that, therefore,

Marines Transfer Leader of Klan To Ease Tension at Camp Pendleton

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 3—Moving swiftly in an attempt to ease a tense racial situation at its Camp Pendleton base south of here, the Marine Corps last night arrested the leader of the Ku Klux Klan at the base and today flew him to a new base on the East Coast.

Remaining members of the pro-white organization on the base, meanwhile, complained of what they called a "seign of terror" against them, and a spokesman for the organization said it would file a lawsuit against the Marine Corps for alleged violation of members' civil rights.

"If they can do it to these people, no matter how unpopular their views might be, it means they can do it to anybody," said Thomas Metzger, a businessman who is serving as a spokesman for the Ku Klux Klan, declared.

Cpl. Daniel Bailey, 25 years old, the "excited cyclops" of the Klan at Camp Pendleton, was arrested by the military police last night at the base, which is 70 miles south of here, after he refused to obey an order to move to another duty station, the Marine Corps said.

Transferred by Air

At 9:30 this morning, with armed military policemen beside him, he was placed on a military plane at San Diego Airport and flown to a base at New River, N.C. Corporal Bailey is scheduled for discharge from the Marines in February.

It was the last of 16 marines whose names were on a list of Klan members found at the base Nov. 14, the day after a gang of black marines attacked a group of whites, possibly in the belief that they were holding a Klan meeting. Six of the whites were injured, and 12 black marines face assault charges resulting from the attack.

Execution Unit Reported In Massachusetts Prison

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, Dec. 3 (AP)—An "execution squad" reportedly is working within Walpole State Prison and is believed responsible for at least three inmate slayings there. The latest one was the Thanksgiving night strangulation of Robert A. Perrotta.

The state police said that Mr. Perrotta was killed apparently because inmates believed he had testified before a Federal grand jury on a series of bank robberies.

"Perrotta's murder was nothing but an ordered execution from the outside," said William Bergin of the State Police.

He said that the order for the Perrotta slaying, and that of another inmate, was given by a prisoner in another institution.

Lieut. Bergin said that Mr. Perrotta, 32 years old, had refused to answer questions before the grand jury, but still was so frightened that he ordered his lawyer to get a complete transcript of the proceedings and send it to the inmate who eventually ordered his execution.

Transcript of News Conference by President-Elect Carter and Two Nominees

Following is a transcript of President-elect Jimmy Carter's news conference yesterday in Plains, Ga., as recorded by The New York Times through the facilities of ABC News.

OPENING STATEMENT

A statement to make before we begin. First of all, I want to welcome back to Plains, Ga., Fritz Mondale who has been down here with me quite lately working on the selection of Cabinet officers and making other decisions about the transition period.

One of the major responsibilities that has fallen on me, my shoulders in recent weeks, has been the selection of a good Cabinet and other major officials who will serve with me and Senator Mondale in the coming four years. The two most important areas are domestic economics, the management of the Government, the preparation of the next budget on the one hand and foreign affairs on the other, and this afternoon I would like to announce the selection of my part of two men to serve with me at the Cabinet level.

The first one is Secretary of State. I've had almost unanimous recommendations from around the country, and in some instances in foreign countries, of Cyrus Vance to be Secretary of State. I've known Cy Vance for several years. He's been a very close adviser of mine. I've become acquainted with him and his capabilities. He's a superb adviser and negotiator—a level-headed, competent good manager.

He's served in many important positions in the Government in the past: he was General Counsel of the Department of Defense, he was Secretary of the U.S. Army; he was later Deputy Secretary of Defense, which is the No. 2 man when Robert McNamara was there, and he's been our chief negotiator in many areas of the world when they have been of most intense interest to our people; in Cyprus in 1967, later on as special representative of the President in Korea, and then, of course, he was, along with Governor Harriman, was the chief negotiator in the Vietnam crisis.

He's now president of the New York City Bar, and he will be working with me as a top foreign affairs officer as Secretary of State. And in a minute I'll let Cy make a comment, but I'd also like to introduce to you the next director of the Office of Management and Budget, Bert Lance, a very close friend of mine—a man who began his career when he was 20 years old as a teller in a small-town bank. He's now president of one of the larger banks in our state.

When I became Governor of Georgia and was committed to reorganize the structure of the Georgia government, Bert Lance was a major person on whom I called to help me with this project. He was the director of our Department of Transportation. He did a superb job. He's a good manager, a good financier, and he will be heading up the Office of Management and Budget, working directly with me in that capacity.

So, I believe that the nation can be reassured that, at least in these first two appointments, the President-elect has superior ability. I have complete confidence in these two men. And now I'd like to call on first Cy Vance to say just a word, and then Bert Lance, and then following that I will answer questions from the news representatives, and then after that, at the close of our session, both Cy Vance and Bert Lance will be available for your questions. Cy.

VANCE: Thank you, Governor. First might I say that it's a great privilege and an honor for me to have the opportunity to serve in Governor Carter's administration. I am looking forward to working in his administration with great anticipation. I am sure it's going to be an administration characterized by both soundness and innovation, and I shall do everything within my power to justify the trust which Governor Carter has placed in me and to discharge my responsibilities to the country, and to the President faithfully and well.

LANCE: Governor Carter and Senator Mondale, I can only echo what Mr. Vance has said. It is a great privilege and a pleasure and also a great challenge to serve in the Carter administration. This is going to be a great administration for this nation, and a lot of things are going to happen that I think will reunify this country and bring us all closer together. We have a big task ahead in the economic area. I think you'll see great emphasis placed upon the relationship of the economy to the total good of the country and it's going to be a real thrill and privilege for me to be back again in the Carter administration.

CARTER: I'd be glad to answer questions now, Miss Thomas.

QUESTIONS TO CARTER

1. Steel Price Increases

Q. Do you think the steel price increases were justified, and the others that followed recently? Do you think that the industry took advantage of your position now of seeming to be powerless out of fear of your future economic policies?

A. I can't say what the motivations of the steel industry were, or whether the increase was justified. Although I do have a right to speak when something concerns me. And even assuming that the steel price increases were justified, I felt and still feel, that the leaders of the steel industry could have made a dramatic and very important contribution to the stabilization of domestic and world prices by refraining from a steel price increase at this time.

With a prospective OPEC meeting coming along, with the decision still being formed about the increase in the price of oil, I felt that this would be an indication to them and to the world that we are going to make a slight sacrifice here and forego a prospective increase, even though it may have been justified.

This still comes out in my mind, as a non-economist—and I have not studied it in depth about whether or not the price increase is needed or will stick. There is not a heavy demand at this time for steel and I understand that already some of the companies that have increased their prices are selling at a lower price.

designed to act quickly before I went into office. I don't know whether or not it was justified. I wished several days ago, and still hope that the steel companies might forego this increase or terminate the increase to indicate to the rest of the world that we're going to do all we can now and in the next administration to hold down the inflationary spiral.

2. Wage and Price Controls

Q. During the campaign you said you didn't want to use wage and price controls but that standby authority might be something that you would consider. I believe earlier today you said flatly that you would not request standby wage and price control authority during your administration. What made you change your mind?

A. I have no intention of asking the Congress to give me standby wage and price controls and have no intention of imposing wage and price controls in the next four years. If some national emergency should arise, and I think that's a very remote possibility, that would be the only indication I can see for a need for wage and price controls. I believe that the primary threat in these next four years is with continued unemployment, and I believe that with strong leadership, with my appealing to both industry and business on the one hand and labor on the other, to show constraints, that an adequate mutual responsibility will be assumed and unnecessary increases of prices and wages can be avoided. So I don't see any possibility or advisability of my having or asking for wage and price control authority.

Q. In light of the fact that the Consumer Price Index went up .6 of a point today—is the third time in three months that it's risen dramatically—I still don't understand what the purpose of not having standby authority might be. You need not use it unless you wanted to.

A. Well, I can't continue with you about it. My statement stands, I don't believe that I will need standby wage and price authority. I believe in a free market system and always have. And I believe that the constant threat of wage and price controls is sometimes a stimulation for unwarranted increases in wages and prices, and I want to remove that threat completely from business and labor and form a partnership with them so that we mutually can be responsible for unwarranted increases. That's one of the factors that perhaps might help to answer your question. Yes, sir, Mr. Cloud.

3. Action on Steel Prices

Q. Governor, could you explain in any more detail than you already have, which has been fairly general, the steps and processes that you followed in order to convey your message to the steel producers about your concern over the price increases?

A. Well, there was one Republican leader in the Senate who volunteered to help me by expressing my concern to the steel company leaders. And I also asked Mr. Lance, on my left, to contact the three major steel companies who control a great deal of the steel sales in this country and ask them not to join the first group of smaller companies who began the steel price increase, pointing to them the reason that I've just described to you.

They sent word back that they thought the steel price increase was justified, and that was the limit of my direct relationship with them through one Republican Senator and through Mr. Lance having been authorized to speak for me.

As you know, the Council on Wage and Price Stability has also made a public statement questioning the need for the steel price increase, and I think this is a combination of effort that was made. There was some communication between my staff members and the staff members of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, but that was not at the executive level and it was not between myself and President Ford.

4. Cabinet-Selection Process

Q. Governor, you said earlier that your selection in the Cabinet-level officials would be a very deliberate and a fairly open process, comparable to the process by which you selected Vice President-elect Mondale. Some of the steps seem to have escaped us this time. I mean, I wonder, without causing embarrassment to persons not present, whether you could fill in some of the deliberations that took place and how you arrived at the choices you picked out.

A. I spelled out earlier, I think in the last press conferences here, the procedure that I would use and that's the one that I would use. I spend, I would say, six or eight hours a day on the telephone calling different people around the nation in whom I have confidence, who have special knowledge about, for instance, foreign affairs, or defense capabilities, or finance, or international and domestic trade, or health, education and welfare or whatever the case might be, asking them for their advice on who ought to be considered for our Cabinet positions, or for lesser posts.

Then, out of that series of recommendations that come to me from knowledgeable people, there almost inevitably develops a pattern which shows that many different people from many walks of life with different backgrounds recommend a certain group of persons.

Then I turn that list over to my staff members, headed by Hamilton Jordan, and we do an in-depth analysis of that person, concentrating questions about that person or groups of persons. I would guess now that Hamilton is investigating, along with a substantial staff, about 70 people who are being considered for Cabinet posts about which I have not yet decided. And then out of that I form my own opinion, talk to the persons being considered either by telephone or in person and ultimately make a decision.

We are now facing the prospect of making a decision on a group of people—the instant Secretary of Defense, National Security Council Adviser, Secretary of Treasury—and coordinated with that will be lesser positions in State, plus Commerce, Transportation and others, and I consider these in a cluster.

didn't have to have interviews with them over an extended period of time to make my decision. It was a matter of fact of invited Cy Vance down early this week to spend the night with me and we talked five or six hours, and then he attended the economic briefing at the farmhouse early this week.

But I intend to do that as a normal process. There will be cases when I might interview two or three or perhaps more people for the same job. I did not do this on this occasion.

5. Conflicts of Interest

Q. Did you discuss with Mr. Vance the question of any possible corporate interests he might have that might have to be divested in connection with his job as Secretary of State? Do you foresee any problem in this area?

A. We'll have a very rigid requirement about the retention of corporate interests which might be in conflict. Those which are difficult to divest or which would create only a very rare conflict will be completely revealed to the public along with all other holdings. There is an aspect of the law that permits me to assume personal responsibility for excusing a member of the Cabinet from making the decision if there is a temporary or singular conflict. But Mr. Vance and Bert Lance both are familiar with this.

The most difficult decision, I think, has been faced by Bert Lance, who is the president of a major bank and I believe I'll let him answer the questions for himself, but I believe he intends to divest himself of the stock in the National Bank of Georgia.

6. Wage-Price Guidelines

Q. Governor, given your feelings about mandatory wage-price controls, could you tell us what you feel about voluntary wage-price guidelines as a way of holding down inflation?

A. I think that's a good option. I think that in the evolution of a standard or guideline for voluntary wage and price guidelines the best procedure is to do it quickly, to seek in consultation a common agreement with the business and labor leaders.

There are some very serious problems there though in that there is no single person or group of persons in the labor industry that can speak for all workers. And there are certainly no person or group of persons in the business community that could speak for all business leaders.

So it's primarily a matter of public awareness of what my proposals are and those would never be made on a unilateral basis just by me, unless I had substantial support in the business and labor community. For the goals that we set for ourselves it would be doomed to fail. So I would say that in this instance, if I use it, it would be done in close consultation with business, industry and labor leaders.

7. Rhetoric on Appointments

During the campaign, you attacked personal relationships which led to appointments in the executive branch and you also called for people from outside Washington to lead the government. A. Yes, Q. In view of that, your appointments today of Mr. Vance, who is a close friend, and Mr. Lance, who has served in previous administrations, are they in conflict with your campaign rhetoric?

A. No, as a matter of fact, neither one of them are from Washington. Mr. Vance is from West Virginia and now lives in New York. Bert Lance is from the north Georgia mountains and still lives up there. I think he's now moved to Atlanta. But I'll have, by the end of my Cabinet selection procedure, I think a good geographical distribution of persons and I would say a fairly good distribution of those who served in Washington before and those who have not.

I think it would be almost ridiculous to bring someone into the Secretary of State's job who had no experience in international affairs, who had no experience in international economics, who had never negotiated a major conclusion among nations and who had very little acquaintance on their own part with the relationship with other countries. So I will balance it well, and I think that this is a good representation of at least two categories, and later as we make additional appointments, there will be a good representation, I think, of women and minority groups as well.

Q. Mr. Carter, you said that you check with people around the country regarding your candidates for appointments. Do you check with Republicans as well as Democrats? A. Yes, I do. Q. For men like Mr. Vance and Mr. Lance? A. Yes, I do. Q. Would you care to tell us whether you also checked with President Ford or any members of the present Administration? A. Well, I haven't checked with President Ford but I have checked with members of the present Administration. Yes, yes, ma'am.

8. Humphrey-Hawkins Bill

Q. There seems to be some confusion on Capitol Hill on just where you stand on the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill. There are people up there who think that your support of it has been, so far, lukewarm, at best. Could you tell us exactly where you stand on that?

A. I don't know the exact form of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill at this point. So far as I know the Humphrey-Hawkins bill has not gotten out of either committee in the House or Senate, you know, ready to come to the floor. As I've said many times, the principle of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill is one that I think is admirable to cut down unemployment with a heavy dependence on the private sector of employment with reasonable goals for achievement for a degree of unemployment. I think now, 4.5 percent at the end of four years, and as the Humphrey-Hawkins bill has been amended many, many times in the last two years, it's become closer and closer in consonance with my own beliefs. So far as the exact form of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill now, I can't say whether I favor it or not, I don't know it. But I'll do everything I can to reduce unemployment.

9. Kissinger-Vance Plans

Q. You and Mr. Vance have had a chance to talk a little bit now; have you talked about any possible traveling he might do between now and Jan. 20 with Secretary Kissinger, or a role for Secretary Kissinger after Jan. 20?

A. I think the amount of travel that Mr. Vance would do would be fairly minimal. I have discussed with Secretary Kissinger the need for the Secretary of State-designate to start meeting with him immediately to go over the remaining negotiations that are proceeding or waiting to proceed around the world, to make sure we know in detail unpublished aspects of previous negotiations that have been concluded, and to make sure there's an orderly transition.

Mr. Kissinger has assured me that this would be the case, that he's eager to meet with the Secretary of State as soon as I choose him for the next Administration. Does that answer your question?

Q. Well, how about Secretary Kissinger remaining in any way in touch with the State Department or in any semi-official role for you after Jan. 20?

A. Well, I think it would be inevitable that present members of the Administration would make themselves available to us to answer questions that might arise in the next four years about things that did occur under their own Administration about which we were not familiar. And this would particularly be the case in foreign affairs.

If they also knew leaders in the world, for instance, with whom Cy Vance or I are not acquainted, we would, I think, routinely call on Secretary Kissinger about an assessment of their attitude, perhaps past private and unofficial conversations, and seek his advice. I would not be reticent about that at all. If it became evident that in a particular part of the world Secretary Kissinger might be useful to help in a more active way, I would reserve the right to ask him to do so. But I have no plans to that effect at this point.

10. Shifts From Past Positions

Q. Governor, last summer at your economic briefings when you were still in favor of strong Congress for standby authority for price controls in case they might be needed, you mentioned a number of other possible steps, including one to provide for a waiting period on price increases so that both the President and the public could show their displeasure—was the phrase you used—that and strengthening the council on wage and price stability. In light of the change on standby authority, are you changing your mind on any of these other steps that you might use on fighting inflation?

A. No. Those would still be options that I would explore in the future. A. Does anyone have a question to ask Mr. Vance or Lance?

QUESTIONS TO VANCE

11. Strategic Weapons Agreement

Q. Mr. Vance, earlier today, the Governor mentioned that he might seek an interim agreement with the Soviet Union on strategic weapons. And I wondered whether by that he means a deal based on the Vladivostok Agreement which would separate the Backfire and Cruise missile portion of these talks and just go ahead with the limit the 2400-1300 missiles.

A. The two remaining issues, or the two principal remaining issues, are the question of a Backfire and the Cruise missile. The first thing that I would have to do is to review the negotiating records, see where we are at that point and then meet with the President to discuss various alternative ways of approaching the problem. I think it's too early at this point for, and would be inappropriate for me until I know the whole negotiating record, know the status of situation as it now exists to give you the very definite answer as to how we'll proceed.

I would say, however, that the question of progress in the SALT negotiations is a matter of paramount importance as Governor Carter has said, and it will receive aggressive attention immediately.

12. Morality in Foreign Policy

Q. Governor Carter talked a great deal during the campaign about injecting morality back into our foreign policy. Do you agree with that, and do you think it's really possible in dealing with Chile and South Korea and India?

A. Yes I do think it's possible. I think that this is a fundamental precept that must be borne in mind. I think that one has to deal also with the practicalities of the situation as they exist, but the undergirding principle must be a concern, and a deep concern, for human rights and the problem of human rights, and that certainly would be a factor in considering how we deal with other nations.

13. P.L.O. Role in Mideast

Q. Mr. Vance, in approaching Mideast negotiations it appears that again a sticking point may be the participation of the P.L.O. either by itself or within an Arab delegation. Could you state what your position is on that?

A. Again, I think it would be inappropriate for me to say anything about not having had a chance to meet with Secretary Kissinger and to familiarize myself with all of the details of the negotiations, to talk about the substance of something like that and I'll beg off on that today.

14. Plans for Future Travel

Q. The Governor just said that he doesn't expect you to be traveling very much. Does that mean we'll be seeing sort of an end to shuttle diplomacy that we've gotten kind of used to over the past eight years and what will your style as Secretary of State? A. I think the question was "before inauguration."

Q. Well, will you be traveling afterward then?

can before the Secretary of State gets involved.

Q. May I follow up on that, Mr. Vance? I think the point John was trying to get at was whether you really envision yourself as much the personal negotiator as Mr. Kissinger has been. It's kind of a hard act to follow and I wondered if you do see yourself playing that same kind of role.

A. I have had some experience in negotiating in the past and when necessary I would expect to do that. But, as I said, I would hope, in the first instances, and in many instances, that this could and would be done by the people who have been picked as negotiators, and that it would be unnecessary for the Secretary of State to get involved.

15. Efforts in Middle East

Q. Mr. Vance, one more question, sir: in a general way, following the previous question, it appears now that from a number of signs emanating that it could be a right moment for getting the Middle East situation back on track and under control, and this is the time to strike, so to speak. I'm wondering if you or President-elect Carter are thinking along these terms, and if you're going to devote some effort relatively soon?

A. Let me say that there do appear to be some encouraging signs at this point; certainly the whole question of the Middle East is one of the most important questions that faces not only the United States but the world, and this is something to which attention should be given at a very early point. As to the substance, again I would beg off at this time until I have further knowledge.

CARTER: I think the time is about over. I might say in response to the last question that most of the parties to the Middle Eastern question have expressed themselves publicly and privately that they believe that the next few months might be an appropriate time to make a special effort. And now that Cy Vance has agreed to serve as the next Secretary of State I believe it's appropriate that he spend a great deal of time consulting with Secretary Kissinger or others in the State Department to bring himself up to date about the present status and to get advice and counsel from Secretary Kissinger and from others who have been more immediately involved in those questions.

But we have, as you know, many places around the world where negotiations are either underway or are now or fairly well in a dormant stage, and I think, to be frank about it, a lot of the other nations are looking to the United States after their elections are over and a new inauguration and inaugurated officers take their place, that we assume a leadership role. But to answer specific questions about it, I think it would be inappropriate at this point.

And I'd like to re-emphasize that we have an excellent government in office who are responsible for the affairs of our country and I want to bend over backwards along with the Cabinet designees not to act as though we were already in office. I reserve the right, as the President-elect to speak out on issues of importance when I think it affects our country and particularly the next four years, but as far as any official responsibility is concerned, that's still in the hands of President Ford's Administration.

And I would like to express again the extraordinary thanks that I feel to Mr. Ford for making possible a smooth transition period. He let Secretary Kissinger and Secretary Simon and Secretary Rumsfeld and others be available to us. We have worked very closely with them and I believe this is an almost unprecedented act of graciousness and cooperation by President Ford has exhibited. (At this point, Mr. Vance moved to the lectern.)

QUESTIONS TO LANCE

16. Bank Stock Divestiture

Q. Can you tell us, sir, about your plans to sell your bank stocks of whatever you have in mind? Well, those plans are still being developed. The question of divestiture has already been reached but how to do it and when to do it has not been defined, totally and completely. I will be glad to make that public as soon as that is reached.

17. Bank Loan to Carter

Q. I ask particularly because I believe your bank has loaned Governor Carter's warehouse some money and — A. It's a good loan. I wish all of them that we had that was good.

Q. (unclear)—Any potential conflict?

A. I don't see any conflict. I think that in response to the question, I'm being very, very serious and specific.

Carter Vows Action on Arms Curb for not taking decisive steps to conclude the strategic arms talks along the lines of the 1974 Vladivostok agreement, which allowed the United States and the Soviet Union each to have a total of 2,400 offensive long-range bombers and missile launchers.

U.S. Sought to Shelve Issue
Of that total, each side would be permitted 1,320 missile launchers, equipped with independently targetable multiple warheads.

The negotiations have been at an impasse because of inability of the two sides to agree whether the Backfire bomber and the United States submarine cruise missiles should be included in the 2,400 total and, if so, under what restrictions. The Americans, who disagreed inside the Administration on the question, proposed leaving the two disputed areas out of the agreement, but this was rejected by Moscow.

Appearing on the Today Show on NBC, Mr. Carter said "It was gratifying" to have received a message conveyed by Treasury Secretary William E. Simon that Mr. Brezhnev would go out of his way to avoid a crisis with the United States. Asked by the host to comment on Mr. Brezhnev's public appeal to get the strategic arms talks moving, Mr. Carter said he agreed that "the SALT talks have been stalled."

about this, that when those loan arrangements were made back early in 1975 that there were very few people around who thought that Governor Carter might be the next President of the United States, and I ought to get some A-plus marks for being that knowledgeable and foreseeing in that regard.

So I'm extremely proud of that relationship. I've long had a high degree of interest in the development of agriculture in the State of Georgia. I think it's one of the great resources that we have. I can't think of any better way than to see it develop than an Atlanta-Ga. bank move out into the Plains. And so I'm proud of that loan. It's a good loan and I don't see any conflict whatsoever.

Q. Will you retain an interest in the bank that you have in Calhoun, Ga. A. Well, I would hope that might be able for me to do so. That again has not yet been determined and we will have to answer those questions as we go forward.

18. Plans for Reorganization

Q. Mr. Vance, will you be the driving force behind reorganization in the Carter Administration? A. Well, I'm sure that the President is going to be the driving force behind the reorganization that only hope that I'll be able to keep up with him and carry out what he wants done. Q. Have you talked about that? A. We have talked about that and he's totally committed, as he has said previously, to the reorganization process and I'm looking forward to being a part of the process and hope that I can be called later on as a driving force in the reorganization effort.

19. Job Offers From Carter

Q. Mr. Vance, were you also offered the job of Treasury Secretary—could you have had that if you wanted it? I told Governor Carter that I was totally committed to him and whatever he wanted me to do and whatever he thought I might be able to do and that I was acting in his best interest and that I had no preference about any job.

20. Cutting Federal Payrolls

Q. Mr. Vance, when you were handling transportation here in the state, you managed to cut employee rolls there, that's what's said. Now you're going to be trying to head a reorganization on a much larger scale. Given the realities of civil service and bureaucracy and what you can do, would you foresee in the period coming that you would actually be able to trim Government rolls in Washington?

A. I don't think that we can talk in the specifics of numbers at this point in time. I think one thing that's awfully important is to talk about the attitude of the administration that's going to be coming into power, how they plan to do things and how well they're doing things. I have found in my experience in state government that state employees—and I'm sure that Federal employees represent a cadre of people who have a high degree of public service ideas about serving this country—that they want to see that carried out, that they can do a good job, they want to be given some recognition when they do a good job and I think the kind of attitude that we talk about from the leadership standpoint in the Carter administration is going to be awfully important going forward. I think the productivity obviously can be increased greatly and will be increased. When we start talking about specific numbers I think you'll see that develop over a period of time.

21. Philosophy on the O.M.B.

Q. Mr. Vance, as you know in the past the O.M.B. has been some sort of a superdepartment in Washington. I'm glad to hear that. Q. A lot of you talk about the attitude of the administration that's going to be coming into power, how they plan to do things and how well they're doing things. I have found in my experience in state government that state employees—and I'm sure that Federal employees represent a cadre of people who have a high degree of public service ideas about serving this country—that they want to see that carried out, that they can do a good job, they want to be given some recognition when they do a good job and I think the kind of attitude that we talk about from the leadership standpoint in the Carter administration is going to be awfully important going forward. I think the productivity obviously can be increased greatly and will be increased. When we start talking about specific numbers I think you'll see that develop over a period of time.

A. Well, again, I think that the hallmark of the Carter administration is going to be trying to unify this country and bringing people together. I would foresee the role of the director of O.M.B. be such role—that we would have the kind of communication, the kind of relationships within the administration that would work toward that goal. So I don't think that there ought to be feared superagency type thing—has to be run in a hard-nosed, business-like efficient manner, and I think it will be run that way.

MODERATOR: Thank you Governor and gentlemen.

maybe make an interim agreement relating to the Vladivostok terms," he said. Mr. Carter said that after concluding the current round of negotiations, which Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has said is 80 percent completed, he would "start immediately" to seek a "more comprehensive agreement" to reduce the level of nuclear arms beneath the 2,400 level.

Mr. Carter did not disclose what position he would take to resolve the pressing questions remaining in the negotiations. He did leave the impression that his administration would not break havoc with those parts of the negotiations already completed.

In his comments about the arms limitation talks, Mr. Carter has left the impression that he agreed basically with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's proposal that the American side should have proposed to the Russians a formula in which there would have been some limitations on the Backfire in return for some curbs on the cruise missile.

The Pentagon had insisted that all Backfires be counted against the 2,400 level and that there be no limits at all on sea-launched cruise missiles.

In answer to other questions, Mr. Vance said he would have to "beg off" on such areas as the Middle East until he was more fully briefed.

Carter Is Traded to Bucks; 76ers Get Two Draft Picks

Fred Carter, whose "gunner" style of playing basketball became redundant to the Philadelphia 76ers after the team acquired Julius Erving, was traded yesterday to Milwaukee in exchange for the Bucks' second-round choices in 1977 and 1978.

The Bucks, whose won-lost record of 4-30 is the poorest in the National Basketball Association, will use Carter to provide more floor leadership and more scoring punch.

Carter, a guard, led the 76ers in scoring in three of the last four years, but his playing time dwindled after Erving, the former New York Nets, joined the club. He played in only 16 games, averaging 6.9 points. The native of Philadelphia has been in the N.B.A. eight years, the last six with the 76ers.

To fill Carter's spot, the 76ers activated Mike Dunleavy, a rookie from the University of South Carolina who has been on the injured list.

Marvin Barnes, the flamboyant forward of the Detroit Pistons, pleaded no contest in Detroit to a charge of carrying a concealed weapon as he was about to board a commercial aircraft. Judge James Canham of the Wayne County Circuit Court set a hearing for Dec. 15.

Carrying a concealed weapon is a felony in Michigan, with a penalty of two to five years in prison. It was not clear what effect the Michigan case would have on a sentence for parole violation that was ordered earlier this week in Rhode Island.

After Barnes was convicted of assaulting a Providence College teammate with a fire iron in 1974, the sentence was suspended in favor of three years' parole. But after Barnes' arrest in Detroit, a Rhode Island judge said the Michigan charge violated terms of the parole and he ordered Barnes to report to state prison Dec. 14.

Jack Nicklaus and Jerry Pate were designated co-winners of the male-golfers-of-the-year award by the Golf Writers Association of America. Judy Rankin was chosen the female player of the year.

Nicklaus was the leading money-winner on the Professional Golfers Association tour with $266,426. Pate, in his first year on the tour, won the United States Open and two other tournaments. Mrs. Rankin won six events and became the first woman golfer to win more than $100,000 in one year.

Skip Manning of Bogalusa, La., was named rookie of the year in National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing. Manning won the honor even though another rookie, Terry Bivins, had a track record that was one point higher in performance points. Manning went over the top in the grading for personal and professional conduct by a special panel of NASCAR officials.

Johnny Bench, the Cincinnati Reds' catcher, presented a silver commemorative medal to President Ford for the President's support of the No Greater Love program. The program helps children of prisoners of war, of servicemen missing or killed in action, and of hospitalized veterans. Bench recently was named president of No Greater Love.

When Blair, president and chief operating officer of the Pittsburgh Penguins, has been removed from control of the club's hockey operations. Baz Bastien, the assistant general manager who was hired by Blair before the start of this season, has been placed in charge.

Blair was a member of a group of investors who salvaged the Pittsburgh National Hockey League franchise from bankruptcy in July 1975. Whether Blair will retain his part ownership in the franchise is still uncertain.

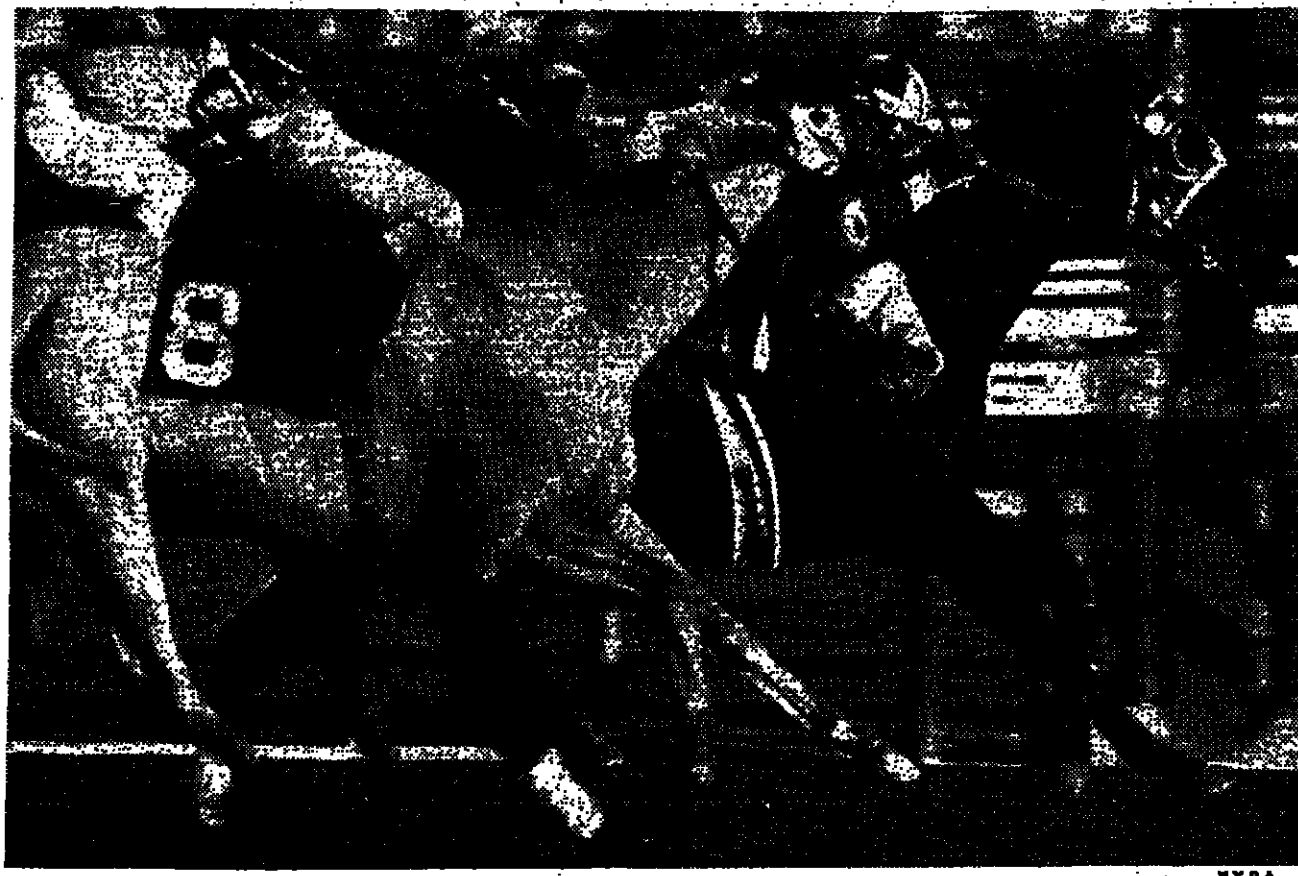

The Chicago White Sox picked up a free agent from the re-entry draft by signing Tim Nordbrook, an infielder, to a two-year contract. Nordbrook, who is 27 years old and "predominantly a shortstop," played last year for the Baltimore Orioles and California Angels while letting his option run out.

A White Sox vice president, Roland Hammond, said "Nordbrook is a very fine defensive ballplayer, and it gives us additional depth. He hasn't been a strong hitter, but then he's played very little in the last two years."

John Wooden, former basketball coach of the University of California, Los Angeles, was resting comfortably in a Los Angeles hospital after treatment for the same type of artery condition that had sent him to the hospital four years ago.

Wooden, whose Bruins won 10 National Collegiate Athletic Association titles, retired prior to last season and is now 68. His doctor said Wooden had not suffered a heart attack and that no arterial surgery would be necessary. The former coach has been maintaining a busy schedule with writing and with television and radio appearances.

Long Shots Bring 3 Cheers at the Big A Long-shot players enjoyed a little Christmas cheer at Aqueduct yesterday when lightly regarded horses accounted for a $906.60 daily double, a $698.60 exacta and a $3,188 triple. The price of the ticket in each case was $2.

Roger Velez started and finished the parimutuel parade, riding Rumanocke to a $28.40 victory in the first race and taking the ninth aboard Fille Ruse, at $54.40. Rumanocke and Fille Ruse each finished a neck ahead of their nearest rival in photo-finishes.

Monsi, the $40.40 winner of the second race, also was involved in a photo-finish. This 3-year-old gelding, ridden by Steve Caulten, triumphed by a head over Genuine Silver to complete the big daily double. From a 6-9 double, the winning combination in the third race exacta went to 12-11—the two horses with the post positions furthest outside in a 12-horse field.

Carmela Mil, a 28-1 shot who paid $58.20, won the six-furlong race by half a length from Karin Jones, a 6-1 chance. Robert Kotenko rode Carmela Mil, a 2-year-old filly who hadn't won in 11 starts.

In the ninth-race triple, the winning combination was 5-7-1, with False Arrest finishing second to Fille Ruse at odds of 12-1 and Deb Vivian, the 5-2 favorite, taking third.

Favored Chief Tamaquac, ridden by Angel Cordero, won the featured eighth race as Jacques Who, a perennial runner-up, finished second in a three-horse photo. Jacques Who wound up a neck back of the winner and a head ahead of third-place Banian.

It couldn't be said that Jacques Who was a born loser, because he consistently brings back checks by finishing in the money. But he's not a born winner, either. Yesterday's start was the 22d of the year for the 6-year-old gray horse, owned by Jacques Wimpfheimer, and the 11th time this season he has been in the money. But he has won only once, his 50 percent in-the-money average coming primarily from five seconds and five thirds.

Quiet Little Table, the winner of the Dwyer Handicap last July, heads a field of 10 today at the Big A in the $54,600 Discovery Handicap. Eddie Maple will ride the Meadowlark colt in the 1 1/2-mile race for 3-year-olds.

The early second choice, is Feather Hogan, a two-time stakes winner.

Watson's 66 Paces U.S. To Golf Lead Over Japan

HARIMA, Japan, Dec. 3 (AP)—Tom Watson shot a 66, a Harima Club course record, and led the Americans to a nine-stroke lead today after two rounds of the sixth annual United States-Japan golf tourney.

Watson's six-under-par effort, one stroke less than the 67 shot by the first-round leader, Haruo Yasuda of Japan, gave a share of the individual lead with Tom Weiskopf after 36 holes. Both have 137's. The American squad has an 11-under-par 565, the best eight scores of the nine players. They had been a stroke behind after the first round.

Tennessee Gets Majors; Cornell Pursuing Blackman shaky for the last two years and the Vols wanted to release him. But they obviously retained him this past season, in which the team had a 6-5 record, because they knew they could not just Majors from Pitt until Dorsett finished his college career.

Pittsburgh officials hope to name Majors' successor before the Sugar Bowl game. George Welsh of Navy, Frank Burns, who coached Rutgers to an undefeated and untied season, and Joe Yulica of Boston College are being considered for the job, as are Pitt assistants.

However, the prime candidate seems to be Jackie Sherrill, the head coach at Washington State. Sherrill was an assistant under Majors at Iowa State and at Pittsburgh before going to Washington State this season. Ed Bozick, executive assistant to Posvar, said Pittsburgh also will call Ara Parseghian about the job. However, Bozick held little hope that the former Notre Dame head coach would accept. Parseghian, who resigned in 1974 after 11 seasons with the Irish, has claimed repeatedly that he does not want to return to college coaching.

Worried About Bowl

When Majors gets to Tennessee he may have left behind a team that will receive more awards and trophies for achievement than any college football squad has amassed in one season. Pitt has already won the Lambert Trophy as the season's outstanding major Eastern team, and Dorsett has won the Heisman Trophy. If the Panthers beat Georgia they may pick up as many as nine other individual and team awards.

Of prime concern to Pitt officials is what effect Majors' departure will have on the outcome of the bowl game. They seem to count upon the large number of experienced juniors and seniors on the team to carry the day.

Posvar said, "I'm a layman in this but our experts tell me that the strong leadership of our upper classmen will make a difference."

However, Dorsett said Tuesday that he thought if Majors announced how he was leaving for Tennessee it "will have an effect on the team."

Cornell has scheduled a news conference for Tuesday at the Cornell Club in New York, where it is expected the Big Red will announce the appointment of Blackman.

Iran Tops Soviet Union In Wrestling Tournament

TEHRAN, Iran, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Iran won the 10th Araymhr international freestyle wrestling championships today for the 10th time, with the Soviet Union finishing second, also for the 10th time.

Russians won the two heavyweight classifications and the lightest title, 48 kilograms, while Iran dominated the other lightweight divisions. One American, Erland Onlit in the 180-kilogram division, showing little talent to back up his vast size and weight, literally squashed his way to the bronze medal in the super heavyweight division.

that average is the Jets' all-purpose utility man, Lou Piccone. He is averaging 24.2 yards a return. He may be a very busy man tomorrow.

Piccone also has been designated emergency defensive back. The Jets have four backs who can walk with assistance. Two defensive backs are with injuries.

"If another gets hurt on Sunday," said Coach Lou Holtz, "I'll put in Lou Keller. He's a linebacker. And if I have to go to still another defensive back, I'll put in Piccone."

Part of Shuttle System

Piccone normally is part of the Jets' system of wide receivers, but also is spotted as a running back. The other kick-returner is Lou Giammona, who fumbled twice last week, once on a kickoff return, but he refused to use the excuse, but he is playing with a broken right wrist.

"I'm right-handed, and had hoped to go with the ball in my left hand. He said he could not cradle it well, though, and used his right hand."

"I still should have been able to cradle the ball," he said.

"Oh, sure," said David Knight, "just a broken wrist. Don't be silly. Because the Giants have sold their game, it will be televised in New York over Channel 2. Normally, the Jets are seen on Channel 4, but because they were playing the Redskins, they belong to the National Conference, which means CBS-TV; they would have been on 2 tomorrow had they sold."

Viewers will see a Lions' game that has yielded an average of only 13.9 yards a rush and 113.9 yards a pass, including seven by the safety, James Hunter.

The Lions' first-place defensive rating is based on a total of rushing passing. But they are not a defensive team, either, in their conference, only four teams have a better record.

The quarterback is Greg Landry, who has completed almost 60 percent of passes and has been intercepted six times. He ranks ahead of such quarterbacks as Fran Tarkenton and Staubach.

The only Jet in the top four of category is the place-kicker, Pat Lee. He stands fourth in the American conference with a 69.2 percentage in goal efficiency. He has connected nine of 13 attempts.

Puetz to be Married

Garry Puetz, the Jets' right tackle and Cindy Weeks of La Plata, Md., will be married next Friday. Miss Weeks is the sister-in-law of Joe Fields, who plays center a few feet away from Puetz. The prospective bride and groom met at Fields' wedding last February.

The 'Doomed' Day-Care Center That Just Won't Roll Over and Die

By NADINE BROZAN

Our Children's Center at New York City Community College in Brooklyn has refused to close its doors although the Agency for Child Development announced last winter that the day-care center was among the 28 it would no longer fund.

At the time, the odds were that the center could not survive on its own resources. "Most people thought we wouldn't last three months," Bobbie Sweeting, chairman of the center's board, recalled recently.

Ten months later, the center appears healthy if not prosperous. It operates on a budget of $15,000 to $20,000 a year rather than the $167,600 it had received from the Federal Government under the Social Security Act.

It did have $16,000 from a student donation that carried it through the low-income or welfare families. Under state guidelines, the maximum that a family of four with both parents working can earn to qualify to use public day-care centers is $14,605 a year. But many families using the system fall far below that ceiling.

The atmosphere at Our Children's Center was decidedly optimistic the other day as staff members gathered to describe how they had kept the program going and parents told how it had enabled them to attend college.

The fact that the center pays no rent, everyone agreed, eased the burden considerably. That point was illustrated by the presence on the premises of another center, the Kissing Monster, which was also eliminated from the Agency for Child Development rolls in January.

The Kissing Monster's future is in far greater jeopardy, however, for it has been unable to find new accommodations at a manageable rent. Under a temporary arrangement, it is now housed in one room at Our Children's Center in exchange for a small contribution.

The Kissing Monster was in the middle of a $50,000 Federal Government-financed renovation of a Brooklyn Heights school building when the city agency froze its funds. It was subsequently evicted from the $1,000-a-month quarters.

"Now our money has run out, we no longer have a nest egg, and we don't know if we can open next week," Eva Lloyd-Jones, the director, said. "The staff may just have to take the children to their own homes if we don't find something soon."

Sliding Fee Schedule Raised

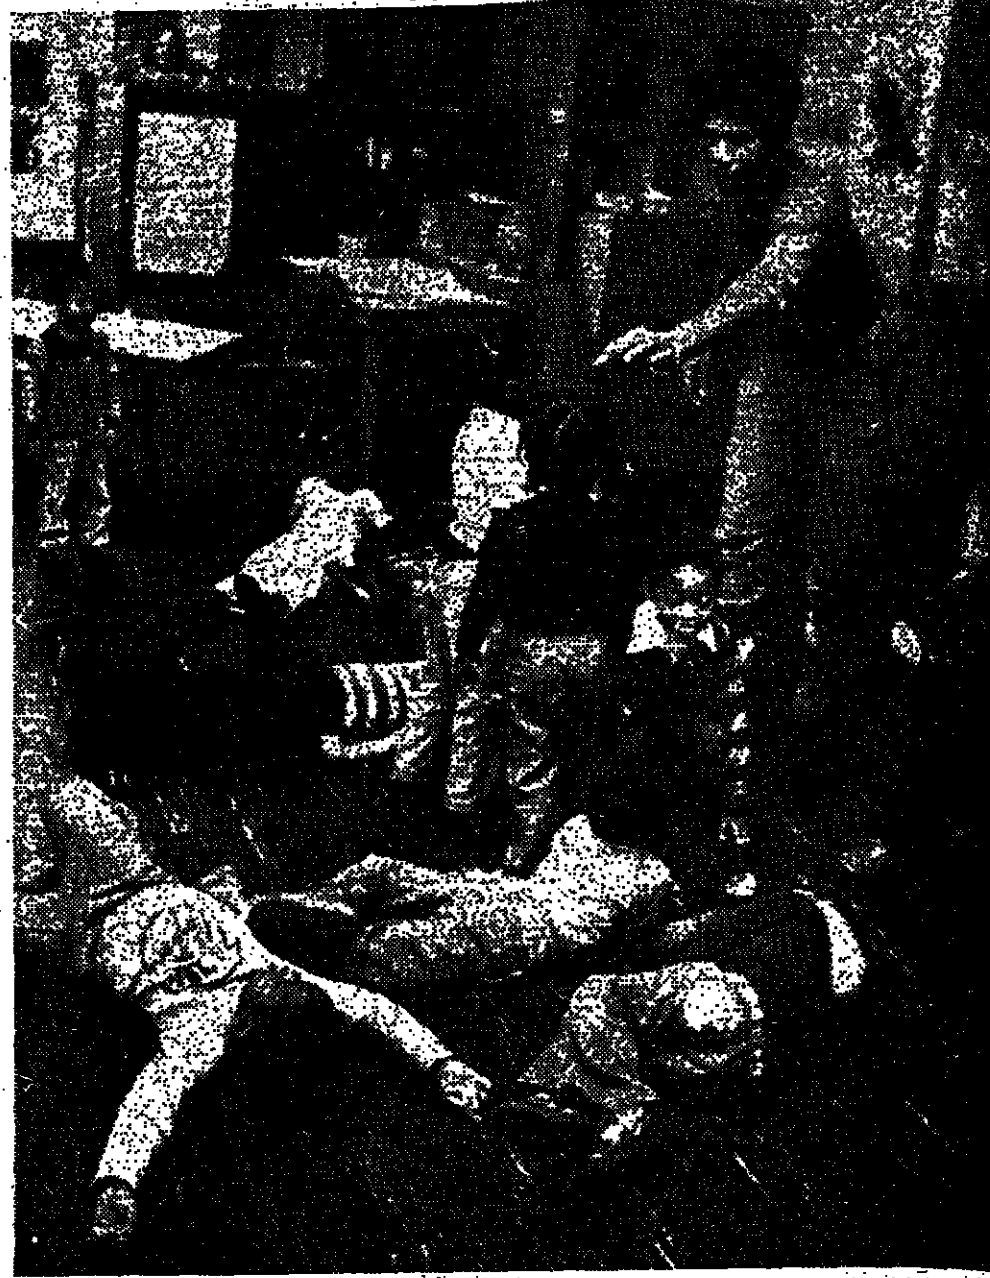

The freedom from paying rent, however, did not insure the survival of Our Children's Center, so it slashed some expenditures and raised its sliding fee schedule to $3 to $45 a week and organized fund-raising projects to meet the others.

Sheila Warner, the acting director, explained, "The main way we have been able to stay open is that the staff works for nothing. We're simply surviving through staff dedication and the hope that money will come through somehow."

The staff of 14, whose salaries had ranged from $6,000 to $13,000 a year, is down to six. Most of those remaining are collecting unemployment checks and working as volunteers.

The staff gives up its salaries and gets paid in pupil results spring. But it is still at loggerheads with the city over $11,000 in unpaid bills and claims by the Internal Revenue Service that money withheld from paychecks by the city has never been paid.

The staff has shrunk by more than half, and the kindergarten program has been dropped. There are 42 children enrolled compared to the 55 cared for in better times. Although licensed for 45 children, the center had been permitted to overenroll to compensate for absences and part-time attendance.

In some ways, Our Children's Center, which serves college students, is not typical. Although students are eligible to place their children in public day care, the public system is generally utilized by working families. And because the center is housed in a college building it does not pay rent, a situation that is not uncommon but certainly not widespread.

In other ways, it mirrors its counterparts. Its children come mainly from

Asked why he was willing to work without pay, James Street, an assistant teacher, said, "How can you ignore the results when you see the children learning? If we leave, the center will close, and we're not doing anything else anyway."

Ann Deas, the office manager and bookkeeper, who said she was being supported by her parents and her unemployment insurance, said, "If we stop, everything we have done will be lost. And I just know that somebody is going to throw a million dollars our way or that I'll hit the lottery."

The parents who use the facility so that they can attend the City University college, which is known for its courses in hotel and restaurant trades, data processing, early childhood education and dental laboratory work, were as determined as the staff that the center not collapse.

Bobbie Sweeting, the chairman of the center's board who entered college two years ago at the age of 36, switched her major from pre-pharmacy to liberal arts to be able to give the facility more of her time.

"For some of us, the chance to go to college came later because of the lack of money," Mrs. Sweeting said. "Now we're trying to put our lives together, to enrich ourselves and our families. When you finally make that choice to go back to school, then you find you must fight for what you can get."

Mrs. Sweeting said that if the center had closed she would have had to abandon her education. "I had no place to turn to get anybody to take care of my son [Martin, now six years old]. My husband had lost his job as a city purchasing inspector, and there was no money."

Fund-Raising Ventures

That spirit of tenaciousness led to a variety of fund-raising ventures that have so far brought in about $8,000.

Benefits, mainly dance events because Larry Phillips, a teacher, is also a dancer, have included performances by such companies as the Alvin Alley Dance Center Workshop and the Ballet Hispanico. On Dec. 17, there will be a performance by the International African-American Ballet and a bazaar.

The center has organized all sorts of sales. "We even had a chicken dinner sale," Mrs. Sweeting recalled. "We had parents frying chickens in closets and we sold chicken all day. We also have an ongoing business selling nuts and honey and became a licensed agent for the New York State lottery."

Two hundred solicitations to industry yielded $300 from a department store and $500 from a bank.

The center has abandoned legal efforts to change its status. When it first lost its funds, it went to the State Supreme Court asking for restoration of funds on the grounds that the cut had been made capriciously and that it was able to provide care at less than the state guideline of $65 a week per child. It lost the original suit and the appeal.

Center's Troubles Began When City Cut Off Funds

The crisis at Our Children's Center began last January when the city decided that it had to slash its day-care allocations by $15 million and stopped providing funds to 28 centers.

In July, with the financial situation worsening and a new day-care budget reduced from $150 million to $115 million, the city dropped more centers. Under Title 20 of the Social Security Act, the Federal Government provides 75 percent of the funds, with the remaining percent divided equally between the state and city. But because of an enormous drain of paying for direct lease centers, the city's share recently has come closer to 20 percent, according to Stephen Tamk, assistant to Lewis Frankfurter, executive director of the Agency for Child Development.

The cuts were yet another blow to a day-care community reeling from revelations of those direct-lease scandals and other irregularities, and from the imposition of complicated new criteria for eligibility.

Higher Scale of Fees

Although the income ceiling for city residents using day care was raised, a higher scale of fees that could amount to as much as $40 a week per family was instituted. The state also imposed a $65-a-week limit on the amount any center could spend per child a week and stopped reimbursing centers for children who were absent more than a specified number of days.

The fund-cuts sent center staffs into picket lines and demonstrations and into largely unsuccessful court battles against the Agency for Child Development, the city department that distributes funds and regulates day care.

Even in the 344 centers that continued to receive support, allocations were drastically reduced. As Mr. Tamke put it, "We cut everyone back to the bare bones." In fact, that was done before any center's fund were stopped. Among other measures, the procedure of admitting new children was transferred from individual centers to a central office, as 500 family counselors were dropped.

The agency stopped paying for center meals. Instead, the centers are reimbursed by the Federal Department of Agriculture, with the reimbursement dependent upon the size of a child's family and the family's income. Construction of new day-care facilities, which had been on the rise until last year, stopped and, in fact, many buildings were left vacant.

In August, the Agency for Child Development itself underwent a major upheaval when Commissioner Betty Whaley, under whose administration the cuts had been made, resigned and Mr. Frankfurter assumed chief responsibility.

Although withdrawal of support virtually kills public day care, about one-third of the 76 centers whose funds were halted have refused to close, even though that has meant operating on the slenderest thread of hope.

What is keeping the centers going is the hope that they will get funds under the Mondale-Packwood law passed earlier this year.

They Laughed When the Professor Gave the Pork Chop a Pineapple Juice Injection

By KEITH LOVE

If Nicholas Kurti opened a restaurant, one of his desserts would be vacuum meringue.

And back in the kitchen, along with the ovens, the copper pots and the ladders, there would be a bell jar, some sophisticated thermometers and a vacuum pump.

The kitchen would resemble a laboratory, for Professor Kurti is a physicist. His work at Oxford University with low temperatures has won him several awards and once led an associate to describe him as the coldest man on earth.

At a recent lecture entitled "The Physicist in the Kitchen," delivered to members of the physics department at City College, Professor Kurti combined frying pans with Bunsen burners to advance his theory that the kitchen was but another place to enlist science in the service of the arts.

But Dr. Kurti, who was a visiting professor at City College in 1963 and was here to renew old ties, had obviously designed his lecture to amuse the physicists, who began laughing as soon as the professor snapped a neatly pressed half-apron from the folds of his suit and plunged a syringe filled with brandy into a mince-meat pie.

Inoculated Pork Chop

"This is the only way to put brandy or cognac into mince-meat pies without disturbing the crust you have worked so hard on," the professor said, holding up the syringe. The fact that such spirits are usually mixed with the ingredients before the pie is baked did not seem to bother Professor Kurti, who insisted that his technique allowed the cook to enhance the flavor of his pies with fresh liquor.

Professor Kurti next used the syringe to inject fresh pineapple juice into a pork chop. Pineapple, he said, contains an enzyme called bromelain that breaks down protein. "This, I decided, is why we so often eat pork with a slice of pineapple," the professor said.

He cooked two pork chops over a Bunsen burner—one chop injected with pineapple juice, the other plain—and served them after the lecture. The treated piece was soft enough to cut with a thin plastic knife.

The syringe idea had nothing to do with physics. It was the professor's way of illustrating his contention that cooks should be more imaginative. He also thinks that kitchens should be equipped with gauged thermometers that would give readings on several parts of a roast. And he would like to invent a timer with multiple tones that could be used when several dishes are cooked at once.

Invented Baked Alaska

But what interested the physicists more was the vacuum meringue, which is prepared with equipment that is to the laboratory what saucapans and mixing bowls are to the kitchen.

In a five-minute color film, Professor Kurti was shown placing three meringues under a bell jar. As the meringues were heated, the vapor was pumped away, and the meringues could be seen growing larger and larger. The professor, clad in a red chef's apron, was standing nearby reading the gauge on the pump, a scene that drew loud laughter from the audience.

Professor Kurti explained with a straight face: "Ordinarily you cook a meringue by baking out the moisture. I do it under a vacuum and pump away the humidity."

The point, the professor said, was that ovens should be made more airtight so that foods could be baked or cooked at lower temperatures.

For his final demonstration, Professor Kurti turned to a microwave oven to show that "new dishes should be invented for new gadgets." The professor's invention was more like a revision, something he called inverted baked Alaska.

Scientific Explanation

The concoction consisted of a brandy and sugar mixture surrounded by a layer of frozen ice cream. What emerged from the oven was cold on the outside and hot on the inside, a baffling result that the physicist in the kitchen explained this way:

The molecules of the ice cream were rigid, in the frozen state, and the short baking time in the microwave oven did not speed them up. The molecules of the brandy and sugar filling, on the other hand, were not fixed, so the oven's heat easily raised its temperature.

The physicists were satisfied with the explanation, but looked somewhat skeptically at the dessert itself. Professor Kurti, taking no chances as he served his inverted baked Alaska, quoted Jean Brillat-Savarin: "The discovery of a new dish contributes more to the happiness of mankind than the discovery of a new star."

A Toy Is Recalled From the Market

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3 (AP)—Some imported shipments of an inexpensive blowup toy called Blobo Bubb-A-Loons have been found to contain a hazardous chemical and will be removed from the United States market.

The product, sold in sizes priced from a dime to 69 cents, is a simple kit with which children can make balloon-like balls by blowing through a straw into a wad of plastic material.

According to the importer, the Imperial Toy Corporation of Los Angeles, the inflatable plastic in certain lots of the item contains benzene because of a processing error by the manufacturer in Taiwan.

Imperial's executive vice president, Arnold Rubin, said that there were no known instances of injuries to either children or adults from using the product. "We've never had any complaint," he said.

Benzene, a hydrocarbon often used as a solvent and in making plastics, is banned from toys as a hazardous substance. If inhaled or ingested over a period of time, it can cause irritation of the mucous membranes and damage bone marrow cells.

Discovery of the banned chemical was made through routine tests, Mr. Rubin said. He said that the company was working with the Consumer Product Safety Commission on a voluntary recall, beginning today.

Mr. Rubin said that 15 million tubes of the item had been marketed since 1973, but not all shipments contained benzene. The packages to be recalled, he said, carry one of the following five item numbers: 028, 338, 339, 548 or 625. Other Bubb-A-Loon packages are safe, he stressed.

Mr. Rubin said Imperial could not say exactly how many of the contaminated packages, which contain one to six tubes each, were still on retail shelves. "But there should be very few on the market now," he said. "It's basically a summer toy."

Medical authorities say that sustained, heavy doses of benzene can cause permanent damage to health, but most people will recover fully after stopping exposure to the chemical.

Mr. Rubin said the chance that a child could become ill from playing with Bubb-A-Loons was "very very slim."

"The benzene will immediately evaporate when the tubes are opened," he said.

Parents who believe their children may have any of the suspect items should return it to the store where it was purchased for a refund.

About New York

Police Duty, and the Stresses

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

One of the ugliest terms in the police officer's vernacular is the reference to "Bow and Arrow Squad," or the "Bibber Gun Squad"—a pejorative designation of the groups of police officers who have been relieved of their duties because of some sign of instability or protectively transferred from streets to paperwork.

Informal outsiders smile and use the term. But, more importantly, the police use it, too. And Capt. William P. Rose, a descriptive, intelligent manager with searching blue ranks signs of mental stress, does not like the term one bit, because it is a measure of the resistance to the help he is to offer.

One day ago, a 15-year-old boy was shot in the head in what the prosecution is obtaining murder charges against policeman, described as a "totally provoked, unjustifiable, intentional act." While the police union has defended the officer in its usual way—describing him as a duty-bound public servant not supposed to be able to appreciate—the initial suspicion was that the officer, if guilty, it has suddenly snapped without warning.

Captain Rose put his "early warning" callists in doing a profile of the officer, Robert H. Torsney, after the killing, which was supercharged rovers because it involved a white er killing a black youth. "It was neutral . . . He was bland," the sin said of the officer, who had fired his gun in eight years until killing. In fact, the captain's special alert information files in the department's basic method of trying to troubled policemen—had nothing on the officer.

Knowing well the subtle things that, ideally, he needs to track, the captain instead is left to looking for more overt symptoms in the negative info files, hoping superiors submit them. Such things as excessive sick leave, a drop in performance ratings, and the almost Freudian symptom of a police officer's misplacing his shield or gun.

Each policeman's negative info file is culled once a year. It used to be done every six months, until economy measures cut personnel. It is done manually, although the captain's superior, Chief of Personnel Cornelius J. Behan, hopes to see it done by computer eventually. When something serious is turned up, the file might be put on quarterly reinspections, and eventually the captain might dispatch a sergeant to the precinct of a troubled officer to attempt inquiries. This is a difficult task, but the captain says it can be surprisingly effective, because a colleague approached in confidence, although wary of outside authority, often welcomes the arrival of help for a friend.

Even where this method gets an officer into the department's counseling services, success is not guaranteed. Recently, a police officer committed suicide on the Brooklyn Bridge, stopping his car on the way to a counseling session.

There are 26,000 members on the force, and a total of about 150 have been dismissed for personal problems in the last three years. Currently, 352 active members have had to turn in their guns, some for such simple reasons as a temporary hospitalization for physical disorder, and about a dozen more are stripped of their weapons each year. "That's a pretty drastic step in this department, taking away a man's gun," Captain Rose notes.

But some critics, such as Vincent Bouza, a high ranking officer who quit the force recently, contend there are hundreds of additional "psychos" and misfits who would be no loss to the department, but who are kept on. He hardly wins the public endorsement of the department brass with this charge, but it should be noted that in the last round of hiring before the fiscal crisis, the department took a relatively revolutionary step in rejecting, for a variety of reasons, including psychological, 250 of the 4,000 probationary policemen. In the past, most would have been routinely accepted.

Contrary to critics, Captain Rose feels the department has an adequate program for trying to uncover potentially dangerous police officers. His program is four years old, and gained impetus through earlier white police officer-black youth shootings. He says it is making progress in ending the stigma attached to the idea of rehabilitation. But he agrees the "Bow and Arrow Squad" is still a live term of reference among the police.

Justifying a Legend

POCAHONTAS: The Life and the Legend. By Frances Mossiker. 383 p. $12.95. Illustrated. Knopf.

By ALDEN WHITMAN

Who does not know the marvelous story of Capt. John Smith of the Jamestown Colony, how he was captured by the Indians and how he was saved at the very last second from having his brains bashed in on that January day in 1608 by the comely Pocahontas, the favorite daughter of the Powhatan chieftain, who flung herself on Smith as the bluegones were about to descend upon him? The story is recounted with various degrees of acceptance in all the history books; and for those who learn their history from fiction, it was brilliantly and wickedly satirized in John Barth's "The Sot-Weed Factor."

The source for the story is John Smith himself in his "Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles," published in London 16 years after the event and eight years after the tragic death of Pocahontas. In reciting other aspects of his life, Captain Smith was not above burnishing a good anecdote or in borrowing an adventure and fitting himself to it. Thus, in his own age, he cut a most impressive figure, and his heroic stature was accepted well into the 19th century. At that point, the historians of the Northern victors in the Civil War—among them Henry Adams—began to rewrite the nation's history and they leaped upon Smith as an impious fraud, suggesting he had made up his tale.

It was pointed out that he could have borrowed it from Richard Hakluyt's travel books, and that, moreover, the story of the enamored princess is universal. A folk hero of the South—particularly of Virginia—was toppled. Now comes Frances Mossiker, her Texas origins conmingled with education at Smith and Barnard Colleges, to take a softer view of the Pocahontas affair, and one that appeals to late 20th-century sensibilities.

Ring of Truth

Summarized all too briefly, Miss Mossiker conjectures that Smith's hairbreadth rescue has the ring of truth to it, however much he probably embellished a detail here and there. To reach this conclusion, Miss Mossiker calls in both the formidable resources of cultural anthropology and modern studies of American Indian history. She contends that even though the English man's initial approaches to the Indians were haughty and uncivil, the Indians were nonetheless prepared to follow a policy of peaceful coexistence, with a touch of fraternity for good measure.

In this reading, the capture, near-execution and dramatic rescue of Smith become a Powhatan tribal adoption rite, whereby the Tidewater Indians were displaying their good will to the tiny band of Britons huddled at Jamestown. Miss Mossiker presses her interpretation to what I regard as an unlikely length by asserting that the episode "reminds us that at least once in our history there existed the possibility of interracial accommodation." "A flicker of hope," she adds, was kindled in that strange and eerie ceremony, a state that the colonizers proceeded to extinguish—if indeed they ever recognized that it existed.

In reconstructing Smith and Pocahontas, Miss Mossiker has been obliged to act as a detective, for there are no reliable contemporary accounts of the early years of the Jamestown settlement; nor were the British careful observers of Indian politics and mores. By taking the reader with her as she sorts out the most likely facts, the most reasonable possibilities and probabilities, Miss Mossiker gives, in effect, a short course in cultural anthropology. I found it completely absorbing, for Miss Mossiker is a sophisticated decent who possesses a prose style of a high order.

The amount of research she has undertaken is awesome, yet it does not appear painfully obvious that she is reading from index cards or displaying her scholarship for the benefit of other savants. Out of this emerges a likely portrait of Smith in the round and a fairly detailed one of Pocahontas.

Intimate Portrait

That Miss Mossiker's picture of the Indian princess is intimate flows from the fact that we know a good deal about her middle years and death. After Smith returned to England—did he die in England or as a deserter? Did Pocahontas feel rejected?—the princess became detribalized and married John Rolfe, the tobacco planter. She went with him to England, where she became a wonder, and died there in 1617. Her age then was not known for certain, but a good guess is that she was under 25.

In any event, Pocahontas was a remarkable person. Jolly, bright, adaptable, yet reserved and dignified, she made her way with uncommon agility in an alien milieu. The epic qualities that have been conferred on her by legend seem in the main to be justified.

Miss Mossiker does not have a high opinion of European settlers or adventurers in the New World in their relations with the Indians, whose tribal customs and life were enormously sophisticated. Almost always brutish, the Europeans provoked their hosts into unequal armed conflicts, slaughtered them by the thousands and enslaved other thousands. It is not a history to be recounted with pride, and Miss Mossiker offers very little to those ancestor-worshippers among us who trace their lineage to the early settlers.

"Pocahontas" is nonetheless not a syllabus of errors so much as it is an attempt to provide a clear and reasonable picture of first steps on this continent, to convey what it must have been like in Jamestown in 1607 and the next few years, to tell us about the cultural shocks for the British as well as for the Indians.

In this, Miss Mossiker has succeeded brilliantly.

Cyrus Vance for State . . .

In announcing his choice for Secretary of State, President-elect Carter said he had received "almost unanimous recommendations from around the country" and even some endorsements from abroad for Cyrus Roberts Vance. This is an extraordinary and well-deserved tribute to one of New York's most distinguished citizens.

Governor Carter emphasized that he had chosen "a superb adviser and negotiator, a level-headed administrator and manager." Mr. Vance has demonstrated all those qualities in widely varying assignments, showing especially an unusual knack for the sensitivity and timing necessary to advance a tough negotiation toward settlement.

With the open wound of Cyprus still festering as the result of diplomatic failure and the massive Turkish invasion of 1974, Mr. Vance's appointment recalls one of his greatest achievements. In two weeks of ceaseless shuttling from Athens to Ankara to Nicosia and back, he headed off a comparable Cyprus tragedy in 1967. He is known to believe that more adroit diplomacy, rooted in willingness to accept the advice of specialists on the area, could have averted the 1974 disaster.

One quality certain to distinguish Mr. Vance's conduct from that of Henry A. Kissinger is his regard for the United States Foreign Service. Mr. Vance does not hold career diplomats in awe; but they can be certain of a respectful hearing during crises in their areas of responsibility. He is likely also to restore Washington's relations with its European allies to the priority position they deserve.

As Governor Carter made clear yesterday, however, this will not mean any slackening in the effort to "seek peaceful relationships" with the Soviet Union and progress toward reciprocal disarmament. In his press appearance at Plains, Mr. Vance wisely declined to be drawn into specifics on Middle East peace prospects or other issues. A large measure of continuity in foreign policy is inevitable but on his record, Mr. Vance may be far more sensitive than Mr. Kissinger to legitimate third-world aspirations.

In an indiscreet interview some time ago, Governor

Carter's assistant, Hamilton Jordan, indicated that in its zeal to present "new faces, new ideas," the new Administration would pass over Cyrus Vance. The President-elect provided the proper answer to this kind of bizarre thinking yesterday when he said it would have been "almost ridiculous" to choose a Secretary of State untested in international affairs. Governor Carter has chosen wisely.

. . . Lance for Budget

Unlike Mr. Vance, the President-elect's choice for director of the Office of Management and Budget is an unknown quantity to most of the nation, a self-styled "country banker" from Georgia—Thomas Bertram Lance.

It appears clear that the principal role of the new budget director will be to press reorganization of the Federal Government, a major theme of the Carter campaign, and to run the budget office, in Mr. Lance's words, "in a hard-nosed, businesslike, efficient manner."

In Atlanta where he heads the National Bank of Georgia, Mr. Lance is known as a vigorous, aggressive, accessible and efficient executive. A long-time friend and political supporter of the President-elect, he played a key role in pushing Governor Carter's government reorganization plans through the Georgia Legislature. Mr. Lance faces a formidable challenge in attempting to master the far greater complexities of the Federal bureaucracy with which he has had no previous experience.

The new budget director does not appear to be suited to play the larger role of helping to shape broad national economic policies that has been assumed by some of his predecessors, like Charles Schultze in the Johnson Administration and George Shultz under President Nixon. That task, which must take top priority in the new Administration, especially in view of the latest reports of rising unemployment and inflation, will now fall more heavily on the new Treasury Secretary and members of the Council of Economic Advisers whose selection has become a matter of the most urgent concern.

Retreat From Learning

The State Education Department reports that enrollment in New York's colleges and universities this fall has declined by a substantial 6.1 percent. Since high schools are still graduating students in growing numbers, the decline is obviously not yet caused by a shrinking birth rate but by a retreat from college-going.

This retreat is caused partly by economic factors and partly by the new wave of hostility to higher education engendered by those pragmatists who fear the effects of an "overeducated" populace. A significant part of the recently expanded higher education constituency is now beginning to be squeezed out.

The severely curtailed services of the City University illustrate the effects of that squeeze. Even more serious than the institution's total enrollment decline by more than 20 percent is the drop in its part-time enrollment by more than 30 percent. This precipitous drop suggests a social change of shattering dimensions. Part-time students represent in large measure an upward mobility made possible by continuing education.

When the end of free tuition at CUNY was proposed, elaborate assurances were given that state scholarships would pick up the tab for all needy applicants. Unfortunately, fears that such optimism would prove illusory, particularly for part-time students, have now materialized.

To dismiss that socially and economically dangerous trend as peculiar only to CUNY is to ignore developments in all of higher education. The State University system reports a total enrollment drop of 4 percent. Although the state's private institutions register a 6 percent increase in their full-time enrollment, that gain will be of small comfort when measured against their 14 percent loss on their part-time graduate rolls. Incomplete reports on nationwide trends indicate that the continued enrollment growth projected by the United States Office of Education has abruptly disappeared.

Youths from affluent homes are not likely to be affected by these changing tides; the sacrifices will be made largely by the children of the poor and the lower middle class. The present trend threatens to scuttle the democratizing force of continuing education.

Agriculture's Folly

Earl Butz may be gone from the Department of Agriculture, but his spirit lingers on. During Mr. Butz's tenure there was an unending series of bureaucratic efforts to chip away at the effectiveness of food programs designed to help low-income people. The decision of the Administration to drop a special sample of 5,000 low-income families from the nationwide Household Food Consumption Survey next April is a continuation of that ignoble tradition.

The survey is designed to provide data on the nutritional habits of Americans and on trends in consumption patterns. Surveys have been conducted approximately every ten years since the mid-thirties, but the low-income family sampling would have been the first of its kind.

Considering the magnitude of America's food programs, the low-income aspect of the survey would have been an important innovation. Approximately 50 million Americans participate in food assistance programs for which the Government spends more than $8 billion annually. The results of the low-income sampling would have provided a data base for evaluating the effectiveness of those programs, for developing new nutritional policy for the nation and for modifying programs already in existence.

Just one example shows how wrong-headed the decision is. The food stamp program's nutritional design is based on information gathered in these surveys. By excluding the low-income part of the study, the Administration is depriving itself of exactly the information needed to perform that task.

The decision makes no sense unless it is the Administration's explicit policy to run inefficient food programs for poor people. Having dropped his Agriculture Secretary during the campaign, President Ford would do well now to reverse this decision, thereby removing one of the least attractive vestiges of that tenure.

Untapped Revenues

Despite New York's desperate need for new revenues to pay off noteholders and help eliminate a $500 million (or more) deficit in next year's budget, city officials once again have adamantly turned down a long-standing proposal to impose tolls on the East and Harlem River Bridges.

The tolls were initially suggested as a device to help curb motor vehicle congestion and air pollution in Manhattan. In fact, tolls are mandated under a locally developed plan to bring the city into compliance with the Federal Clean Air Act. The current administration in City Hall has, however, chosen to defy the Federal law and to ignore the environmental interests of a central city that is being choked to death by the world's heaviest concentration of motor vehicles.

Mayor Beame and his aides cannot continue much longer to sidestep the fiscal questions raised by their failure to tap a potentially lucrative revenue source or the question of equity posed by their obsessive protection of the minority of persons entering Manhattan toll-free each day—less than 10 percent of the total.

Estimates of revenues that might be derived from the Harlem and East River Bridges range up to $400 million, depending on the rate structure. Even modest tolls limited to peak hours could yield about $50 million a year, a revenue stream that would enable the city or the Municipal Assistance Corporation to sell up to $400 million in bonds to help pay noteholders.

Under present circumstances, there is no reason why motorists who insist on driving their private cars into Manhattan each day should get a free ride. Citizens for Clean Air recently conducted a serious study of the costs that these motorists inflict on the city and their fellow citizens—through pollution, traffic accidents, congestion and the valuable real estate taken up by streets and highways. The environmental group estimated that these hidden costs could reach $5 billion for the city as a whole, or almost $5 for each car entering Manhattan each day.

Urban motorists should start paying their way here, as drivers already are doing in some other cities, not only through the imposition of tolls on bridges that remain free but through other levies, such as heavier fees for parking on publicly owned and maintained streets or fees for entering areas of heaviest congestion.

Singapore has drastically cut congestion and has added more than $2 million yearly to municipal revenues by requiring cars entering a downtown restricted area during the morning rush hour to display a yellow sticker, costing $1.60 a day. It should be worth no less to drive into midtown Manhattan; New York certainly could use the revenues, as well as the relief from crippling traffic pollution.

Letters to the Editor

Subway System: To Destroy or to Save?

To the Editor:

If one were commissioned and paid to recommend the administrative steps necessary to destroy the New York City subway system over a period of time, here's one possible schedule: (1) Raise the fare; (2) reduce the number of riders; (3) cut the service frequency; (4) keep trains dirty, with malfunctioning lights and doors; (5) don't renovate stations.

And then, to be certain that even tourists and visitors have problems, keep the number of system maps to a minimum, make signs confusing and teach employees to be rude and unresponsive.

In order to confuse the populace still further, hire a chairman who is reputed to be a marketing expert (but works to reduce ridership) and a business manager (who reduces train service by 15 percent while boosting fares by 40 percent).

Sounds ridiculous, doesn't it? But just consider the shocking statistics that our subway system now serves 400 million fewer riders per year than 10 years ago, with 10 percent more workers.

Now, if one were paid to recommend steps to save the system, wouldn't they include the following? (1) Reduce the fare immediately even by as little as a nickel to show good faith; (2) increase the number of riders by giving discounts to off-peak riders; (3) install token change machines that work and keep them in good order; (4) improve rush-hour service; (5) clean the cars, make certain that lights and doors work properly.

Also, (6) paint the stations and replace dingy lighting; (7) install better signs with some sense of good graphic design; (8) post readable maps in every car and in every station; (9) promote retail outlets in selected stations; (10) encourage corporations to adopt a station or, at the very least, to contribute to station upgrading like the recent Exxon Corporation effort; (11) lobby for transfer of Westway funds for station renovation; (12) teach and train employees to realize that they serve the public and are paid by them.

Here's a program which could revive sagging New York spirits and uplift civic pride. What do you say, Messrs. Yonich and Guinan?

Imperiled Alligators

To the Editor:

Alligators which are being transplanted from areas in Louisiana where there is an alleged surplus to Arkansas are now looked upon by residents as potential eradicators of nuisance beavers and muskrats. The first time an alligator builds a nest on someone's property or eats a pet dog, or a female guarding her nest or young hisses at a passerby, the alligator, too, will become a nuisance.

Proposed Federal legislation will allow the destruction of nuisance alligators which may threaten or destroy life or property. This legislation is a guise for legalized hide-hunting for profit. As new regulations are imminent, the requests by Arkansas farmers appear suspect. Assuming the farmers are sincere in their desire for beaver and muskrat control, they may, through lack of understanding of alligator behavior patterns, destroy animals which they believe constitute threats—mistaking protection for overt threat, nesting for property destruction, etc.

All alligator transplants should cease until (1) a fair and enforceable protection policy based on knowledge of the animals' habits and behavior can be formulated and (2) local wildlife officials and residents can be educated as to the behavior of the alligator, so misinterpretations will not occur.

The alligator, when not harassed or disturbed, is not normally a threat to man. As long as local wildlife officials erroneously believe that "anything that moves is food to them," local residents cannot be expected to have any reasonable understanding of what does and what does not constitute a nuisance alligator—and the alligators requested today will be unwanted tomorrow.

Of Southern Support

To the Editor:

The president of a T.W.U. local wrote in a Nov. 19 letter about "right to work" laws that Mr. Carter should not worry about offending the business interests in the South since they aren't the people who elected him. Maybe so. But surely the South was the big factor, and it would not have grown so strongly from the ashes of the Civil War to its present economic power had it been unionized country. Southern labor knows this, as well as Mr. Carter.

'Why Can't Voters Be Electors?'

To the Editor:

How long must we continue to endure the Electoral College? Its potential for mischief and subversion of the democratic process has been set forth in countless studies and commentaries by political scientists and pundits, and I have yet to hear one sound or valid argument for its retention. What is the stumbling block in the way of direct popular election of the President and Vice President, such as we now have for just about all other elected offices?

At best, and in general practice, the 538 electors vote as automatons; the candidate who wins a popular plurality in New York State, for example, "automatically" scoops up New York's 41 electors when their votes are actually cast. But there is no constitutional or statutory requirement binding any state's electors to cast their votes with the popular choice of that state's voters, and as recently as 1968, for example, a few electors from a state which cast a clear plurality for Richard Nixon cast their votes for Senator Barry Goldwater, who was not even on the ballot and who received few, if any, popular votes.

In any case, why do 538 individuals need to be vested, even ceremonially, with the responsibility of "choosing" our President and Vice President? Why can't the seventy-odd million voters who go to the polls under, in most cases, the distinct impression that they are voting for the President and Vice President, be the actual electors of the candidates of their choice?

In the election just concluded, the Democratic ticket of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale won a popular majority nationwide—about 51 percent of the vote—and came out just about two million votes ahead of the Republican ticket of Gerald Ford and Robert Dole. It so happens that I voted for and favored the Democrats but that is beside the point—the principle would apply equally, and I would be equally in favor of it, if the result had gone the other way. Yet, if there had been a shift of a mere 12,000 votes in the states of Ohio and Mississippi the popular margins would stand approximately as they now are, but the Electoral College vote would have been 273 for Ford to 265 for Carter, a clear subversion of the popular will.

Many, if not most, of the Presidential electors themselves favor direct popular election of the President, and the abolition of their outmoded, anachronistic and anti-democratic institution.

Children and the State

To the Editor:

In his Nov. 27 letter, Dr. LeVine urges the creation of a U.S. Child Welfare Commission. The Commission would be on their "rights and needs." The State believes the modern family unable to provide the physical, emotional security for children indicated by his advocacy of government intervention to cope with the deterioration of human values and ties.

Dr. Salk's concern for children's family is quite justified, but his proposal for government recognition of their needs is faulty for two reasons. First, there is no belief that governmental paternalism can solve the problems plague families and children. Second, Dr. Salk is attempting to deal with human problems in a typically rationalist manner. But given the social variables in man affairs, the technique of rationalism does not always lend itself to a resolution of the physical, emotional needs of individuals.

Dr. Salk has apparently overestimated the burgeoning process of social change that is manifesting throughout many neighborhood voluntary associations in America. Rather than seeking more government urban and suburban government to alleviate their pain within the social and cultural life of the community, there is hope of our children.

OPEC Oil Alternatives

To the Editor:

In John C. Sawhill's Nov. 17 article, "Facing Energy Reality," he mentions four programs to solve energy problems. The third is the development of synthetic oil. Herein lies a really successful alternative to our present dependence on OPEC nations for our energy.

Scientific American magazine published an article several months ago reviewing the present state of the art of converting coal to oil. The technology, begun during World War II, has been improved to the point where coal can be converted to oil and gasoline and be competitive with present oil prices.

Many coal-producing areas are economically depressed and would come a synthetic fuel industry would also help the economy by employment to our own people. Producing synthetic petroleum products here in the United States is less risky than drilling for oil with the possibility of oceanic change in the political climate. The Federal Government should encourage synthetic oil production tax breaks for investment and of environmental problems. Economists would then be faced with competition which would reduce our imports but also prices low enough for poor nations to afford industrial development.

The Coal Company Dilemma

To the Editor:

In his Nov. 17 Op-Ed piece on the need for a national energy policy, John C. Sawhill is identified simply as "a coal producer." He is not a coal producer, but a coal company executive. He is not a coal producer, but a coal company executive. He is not a coal producer, but a coal company executive.

Of Retardation and Ballot

To the Editor:

In her Nov. 11 letter, Rosemond discusses the attitudes toward the mentally retarded. I find her rather distorted when she comments on the citizen's right to vote.

The individual she describes is totally retarded, living in a shelter home; he is looked after by other public expense; he could not cope with a doctor's questions about his health. If an individual is mentally retarded and if he has, for example, achieved the comprehension of a six-year-old, how can he be truly a valid, independent choice in the election process? Carried to a logical conclusion, all individuals over six years of age should also have the right to vote.

I would appreciate some information on whether the mentally retarded are permitted to vote. If they are, it is then the problem of their being manipulated by self-serving parties. They can become a captive electorate and there are inherent dangers in this situation.

Great South Bay Patrols Pursue the Clam Pirates

By IVER PETERSON

BABYLON, LI.—With clam prices expected to rise after their usual autumn slump, the clam pirates of the Great South Bay are coming out in force.

Suffolk County fisherman is questioned by police officers patrolling the waters of Great South Bay. He was breaking no laws.

a yellow slicker, tongs in the water just off Louie's tree. Louie was a legendary shellfish law enforcer, now long dead, presiding behind the scrub pine that was his favorite cover while watching for clam poachers in the bay's "uncertified" waters.

Somewhere about four miles away, the 300-horsepower speedboat that Federal law enforcement officials recently gave the county police to enforce laws against clamming in waters closed by pollution roared into life. The poacher—or pirate—worked with his back to the shore, thrusting and squeezing his tongs on the bay bottom.

The Pirate Skims Away But no such luck. After a few more jobs at the bottom, the pirate raised his tongs, started his motor and skimmed seaward in a shallow arc, moving beyond the white and yellow buoys that mark the line between the legal and illegal clam beds.

"That's the way it's been since we put the new boats in the water," Sergeant Hoffman shrugged. He straightened his back and shook the last cigarette from the pack. "Now that they know we can outrun them they've been more careful, hitting us for a few minutes and not hanging around long enough to get caught."

The sigh he breathed seemed undecided between the benefit of the new boats as apparent deterrents to clam piracy, and the loss of sport, the high-speed chases and dramatic waterborne arrests, that has resulted from the new wariness of the pirates with the arrival of the new boats last month.

"Yeah, summonses and arrests have been down since we put the new boats in the water," Sergeant Hoffman said as he drove away towards his third cup of coffee of the morning. "If you call it a deterrent, I guess that's a good thing—I'd rather say that if you're a deterrent you are accomplishing your aim." But his heart didn't seem to be in that explanation.

There are 140,000 acres of legal clamming beds on Long Island, all but a few of them in Suffolk County and most of these on the county's South Shore. Seventeen thousand additional acres are under so-called "uncertified" waters—waters that by Federal hygiene standards have a bacterial count form count too high to allow human foodstuffs to be taken from them.

Ironically, these uncertified waters close to shore are also the richest in clams and the easiest to work, and the clam diggers know it. Clams thrive in salt water washed by fresh water seeping from onshore, and the pollutants that these fresh waters bring with them nourish the clams into special abundance while disqualifying the water for clamming.

"If you spend a few hours in an uncertified area where you know the clamming is good," said Donald J. Middleton, State Department of Environmental Conservation director for the Long Island region, "you can do in two hours what it would take you two days to do in a legitimate area. So you're talking about $200 or $300 for a couple of hours' work. It's no wonder that the guys go after them."

There are still more reasons for the temptations of clam piracy. One is that the number of state licensed clambers has doubled in the last five years, to slightly more than 10,000, while the annual take in hard-shell clams taken from the Suffolk County waters has remained about constant at about 4,100 tons a year. At the dock, this take fetches the clambers $14 million a year and, according to Suffolk County Executive John V. N. Klein, comprises more than 50 percent of the world's hard clam take. By the time the clams reach the tables of consumers, the value of the catch amounts to a $100 million industry.

The other reason for piracy is that no one involved in clamming—including Mr. Middleton—seems convinced that the Federal bacterial count limit of 70 coliform organisms per 100 milliliters of water is a valid test of the water's potential toxicity. Swimming, for example, is allowed in water with a coliform count of up to 2,400.

No illnesses Reported "Those standards have never been tested," Mr. Middleton said. "But we do know that thousands of bushels of illegal clams have entered the market and that no one has gotten sick from them." The last case of hepatitis traced to a clam from Long Island was reported 13 years ago.

"If we were to follow our own law to the letter we'd have to close 3,100 more acres right now, 1,400 of them in Babylon," Mr. Middleton added. "There are 3,000 guys down there who are dependent for their living on clams in those waters, and we'd be risking their livelihoods for a standard that since the 1930's has never been tested for legitimacy."

The digger who was unloading his catch in Brightwaters the other day admitted to having raked in "the uncertified" at times, although when asked his name, he clammed up. "I eat 'em," he said, "I feed 'em to my family, and law, he said, "is just there to keep the cops busy."

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

A black Cadillac limousine pulled up in front of City Hall at 3:15 P.M. yesterday, and a tall, lean, distinguished-looking man wearing silver wire-rimmed spectacles emerged. He climbed the steps, walked into the Mayor's office, took off his coat and waited—for the Mayor of Vienna to arrive.

Francis T. P. Plimpton, the city's official greeter, was on the job again. It was not a long wait. Leopold Gratz, Mayor of Vienna, arrived a bit early in a spiffy camel-colored coat for his 3:30 appointment with Mayor Beame, and Mr. Plimpton greeted the Austrian and his aides with a cheery, "Terribly nice afternoon, isn't it?"

Then the city's greeter ushered Mayor Gratz into Mayor Beame's inner sanctum, where the two Mayors chatted amiably in front of the fireplace, with Mr. Plimpton standing to Mayor Gratz's right. The city's greeter looked very proper in a three-piece charcoal gray wool suit with faint pinstripes, a white button down shirt, and a red-and-navy-blue striped tie.

"Mayor Gratz, I think these two cities have something in common," Mr. Plimpton, who will be 75 years old next Tuesday, said in his clear, patrician tones. "You are the musical capital of Europe. The Vienna Philharmonic is almost as good as the New York Philharmonic."

Everybody laughed. Mr. Plimpton noted further that the two city's museums and operas were comparable, but that New York had no equivalent to Vienna's sacher torte.

Smiles. Proclamations. An exchange of gifts. Thank yous. More small talk. Warm goodbyes. The whole thing was over in 10 minutes, and then Mr. Plimpton climbed into his limousine and headed uptown.

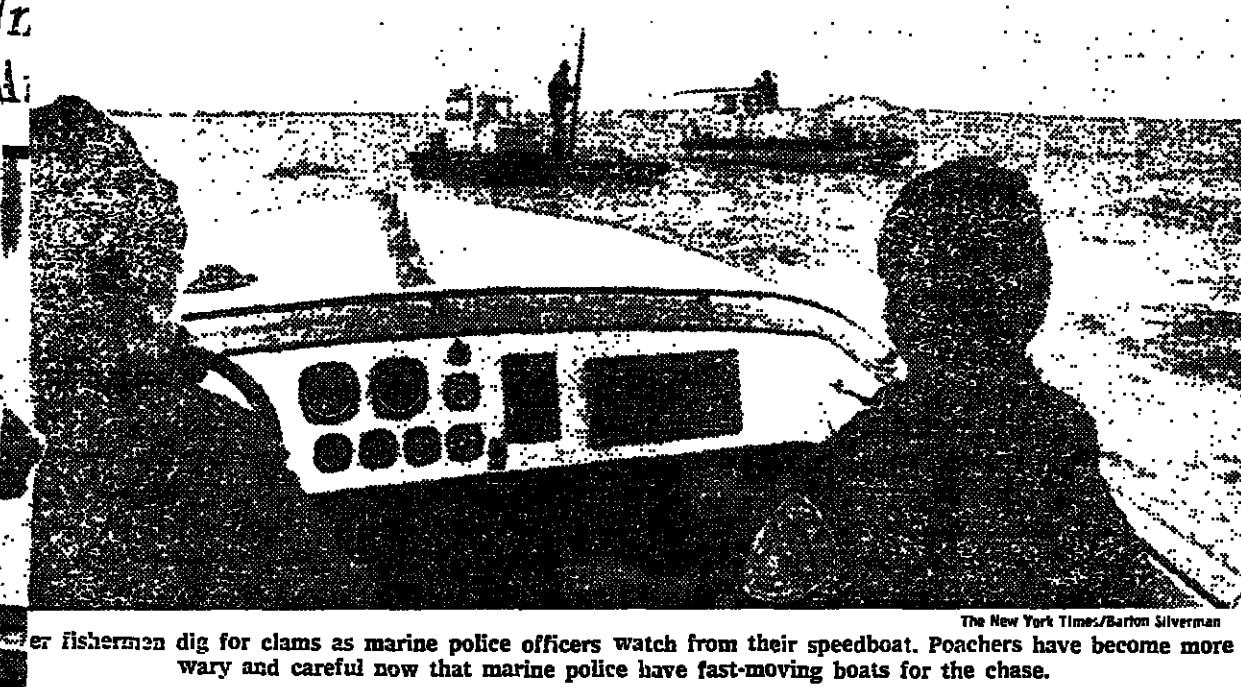

Mr. Plimpton, who is probably best known to the public as a former deputy United States representative to the United Nations under his old law-school roommate, Adlai E. Stevenson, and as the father of George Plimpton, the writer and professional amateur, is the sixth man in the city's history to serve as official greeter.

And like several of his predecessors, he comes from a socially prominent background. The son of an eminent Massachusetts family, his schools include Phillips Exeter Academy, Amherst and Harvard Law, and his clubs include the Century, River, Union and Brook.

Magazine articles have in the past referred to Mr. Plimpton as "the quintessential WASP," a description that draws neither a smile nor a wince. "One thing people don't realize is that we WASPs are one of the most downtrodden minorities in the city," he said evenly.

Mr. Plimpton's official title is head of the city's Commission for Distinguished Guests, and he serves for an unpaid $1 a year. "I haven't any idea why I took this job," he said the other day in his law office, Debevoise, Plimpton, Lyons & Gates, on the 33d floor of 289 Park Avenue. But I remembered from my diplomatic post that meeting foreign

Angry Police Reject Re-hiring Offer

Post at Boisterous Meeting Reject New York City Corrections Posts as Others Delay Decision

By LENA WILLIAMS

About 200 New York City police officers, angry and boisterous at times, yesterday turned down, or delayed their response to, offers from the city to rehire them as Correction Department officers.

They now face the possibility of having their names removed from the preferred list for rehiring as police officers. However, had they accepted the jobs as officers in the city's detention prisons, they would have waived their rights to appointment as policemen.

"You're damned if you do and damned if you don't," said both Paul Kawas and Tom Gentile, who are stationed in the 77th Precinct in Brooklyn. And both added: "It's a Catch-22 situation."

Their sentiments were echoed by several other officers who jammed a smoke-filled auditorium at the Police Academy, 1235 East 20th Street yesterday, for briefing on the job offers by personnel at the Police Department and the New York City Department of Corrections.

Arnelius J. Behan, head of personnel for the Police Department, told the officers that "the city's position has been delayed attention to the rights of its laid-off members."

Interrupted by Heckling

Behan's statement, however, was interrupted by heckling from many of the officers, who had been informed by letter that they could be rehired to the preferred list by applying to the City Personnel Department with a letter detailing the justification for refusing the job.

Yesterday, Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd called upon the New York State Legislature to change the law, saying that "men who were supposed to be rehired by that law" ended up being laid off.

Although their present salary, seniority and pension rights as correction officers are comparable to those of police officers, they are concerned about the danger of being locked up for eight hours a day some of the same people they had put behind bars.

Questions About Situation

"The only things you can take inside the cell are a set of keys and a whistle," Officer Kawas, who has been on the job for three years and delayed his decision to attend yesterday's briefing, asked the officers. "Can you do with a whistle if some cop decides to attack you?"

Among the officers present at the briefing, 22 declined the jobs, one accepted, and 18 delayed their decision until Monday.

Officer Bruce Chechel's letter to Mayor John V. Lindsay, the City's Personnel Director, he wrote: "To ask me to give up my career in the Police Department to ask me to give up a dream and

The coldest weather of the already-wintery season swept into New York yesterday as the city registered a shivering low temperature of 9 degrees. Those New Yorkers with headgear may have felt the cold a bit less.

9-Degree Chill Is a Dec. 3 Record

The following article was published in The New York Times on Dec. 4, 1940:

Winds of near-gale force swirled into the city yesterday from the north and northwest, bringing with them the coldest weather of the season and driving the mercury down to 10 degrees, the lowest temperature ever recorded here for the date.

The low mark, which was reached at last midnight, ended a 34-hour period during which the temperature never went above the freezing point, and was 9 degrees less than the previous low for the month, established on Monday.

The cold weather will begin leaving the city today and head for points as far south as Miami, according to the local Weather Bureau. By tomorrow, the Weather Bureau said, temperatures here should be close to normal again for the first time in four days.

In Riverhead, L. I., the Long Island Cautiflower Association reported that the cold had ruined the last few thousand crates of cauliflower of a total crop of nearly 1.5 million crates.

There was no report on lost cauliflowers yesterday, but the weather report was essentially the same. The National Weather Service reported a low of 9 degrees in the city at 3:30 A.M., the coldest Dec. 3 on record.

New York area motorists also set a new record for Dec. 3, according to the Automobile Club of New York. A spokesman for the group said that more cars were stalled on the date than in any early December day in memory.

SUSPECT IS INDICTED IN WESTCHESTER RAPE

Nursing Student Charged in Case Involving 2 Mamaroneck Girls

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Dec. 3—Alexander J. Verrone, the 27-year-old nursing student who was seized Tuesday as a suspect in sexual crimes against young girls in Westchester County, was indicted today by a grand jury on 16 counts of rape, sodomy and assault.

Thomas A. Facelle, the county's chief assistant district attorney, said the indictment involves an incident on July 28 in Mamaroneck, when two girls, 12 and 13 years old, were attacked by a man posing as a taxi driver. He lured the younger into the vehicle and raped her, Mr. Facelle said, and then picked up the teenager. When he tried to beat her, she grabbed his knife and ran off. The younger girl escaped at the same time, Mr. Facelle said.

The police believed at the time that he was the same man who had sexually assaulted at least five Westchester girls. The attacks continued as parents, school officials and police departments throughout the county took measures to protect children.

Mr. Verrone was picked up this week by Yonkers policemen after they spotted stolen license plates on a car Mr. Verrone was allegedly driving. The suspect sped away, the police reported, and was captured after a brief chase. At least four victims of the series of sexual assaults identified him this night.

Suspect in Nursing Course

Mr. Facelle said that the balding student, who was attending Herbert Lehman College in the Bronx as one of the few males in a junior-level nursing program, could receive sentences of up to 25 years in state prison for each of the major crimes listed in the indictment.

Mr. Verrone was arraigned this afternoon before Judge John C. Couzens in County Court. He was represented by a Legal Aid Society attorney who was granted an adjournment until Monday morning. The suspect remained in county jail without bail.

The Sheriff's Department said earlier in the day that it had a photograph of the rape suspect three months ago, but that he appeared beardless and 30 pounds lighter at the time.

Lieut. Carol Kope, head of the sheriff's sex crimes squad, said the younger victim, only 13 years old, "never flinched" when they were shown Mr. Verrone's earlier picture with hundreds of others.

Mr. Verrone was wearing a toupee attached by four or five snaps sutured to his scalp when he was arrested in Yonkers. "It seemed to be a matter of vanity, rather than a disguise," Lieutenant Kope said, "but it added to the different appearance."

The earlier photograph had been obtained from the police in Bronxville, where Mr. Verrone had been charged three years earlier and charged with attempting to assault a 16-year-old girl with a knife. A grand jury declined then to indict him.

Newly Ordained in Catskills Seek Tax Cut

Special to The New York Times

HARDENBURGH, N.Y., Dec. 3—The residents of this small community in the Catskill Mountains who became ordained members of the Universal Life Church are planning to take the final step toward tax exemption tomorrow by presenting formal applications to the town Assessor.

Last September, more than half of the town's 238 residents were ordained as members of the Universal Life Church in a ceremony at the local community hall. The ordination was performed by George McLain, a 41-year-old plumber from the nearby village of Liberty.

Mr. McLain was then a bishop in the church, a California-based organization that offers divinity degrees by mail. But in a telephone conversation today, Mr. McLain said he had recently been given the title of First Cardinal of New York by the church's president, Kirby J. Hensley.

At last September's ceremony, Mr. McLain ordained 164 residents, almost all of the adult population of Hardenburgh. A lawyer for the residents, Stephen Oppenheim, said today that the ordained members were prepared to present the assessor with applications for tax exemptions, copies of their deeds and signed covenants stating that they have formed churches.

Families or groups of individuals, he said, may legally form their own churches by banding together and saying, "We are a church." They must also agree to meet regularly in the premises "for divine worship or religious observance," he added.

Because of the influx of other tax-exempt organizations in the Catskill area, property taxes for residents have risen so high that some people in Hardenburgh must pay as much as one-half to two-thirds of their incomes in school, town and county taxes, according to the Town Supervisor, Lester Bourke. Most of them work as loggers, laborers or subsistence farmers and earn an average income of $6,000 to $7,000 a year, he said.

As a result, many farmers have been threatened with the loss of their homes and land, which, in most cases, has been farmed by several generations of one family.

The tax-exempt landowners in Hardenburgh include the Nassau County Boy Scouts, the Catskill Center for Conservation and groups of Zen Buddhists and Tibetan monks. Their property represents a value of $5.1 million out of a total assessed value in one school district of $11 million, Mr. Bourke said.

Some Catskill-area lawmakers have introduced legislation to correct inequities in real-property tax laws, but, Mr. Bourke said, "I don't see the elected representatives doing anything they don't absolutely have to do unless they're pushed into it, and that's what we're trying to do."

He said he was not at odds with the tax-exempt organizations who have taken advantage of the law in Hardenburgh. "It's the law that's wrong," he said.

The tax-protest ordinances have spread to several other Catskill Mountain towns. Soon after the Hardenburgh ceremony, Mr. McLain ordained 200 residents of nearby Livingston Manor, who say they will present their own tax-exemption applications to the Town Assessor in a few weeks.

And last night in the Marletown Sportsmen's Club, 35 residents of that tiny Ulster County community were ordained. Mr. McLain says he has performed more than 3,000 ordinations, including 1,027 two months ago in Center Moriches, L.I.

$500,000 for a Fall

A settlement of $500,000 was awarded to a $140-a-week laborer who plunged 30 feet when planing gave way as he was working on the construction of the World Trade Center. The laborer, Domenico Delicarpini, who was 30 years old when the accident occurred on May 15, 1969, has been incapacitated since. According to his attorney, he will never be able to work again. Mr. Delicarpini landed on his head, injured his spinal cord and fractured his neck. The settlement in State Supreme Court in the Bronx involved the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, the Tishman Construction Company, and two subcontractors. Mr. Delicarpini is married and the father of four children.

Youth Indicted in Killing

Christopher J. Doran, an 18-year-old high school senior from Massapequa Park, L.I., was indicted by a Nassau County grand jury on charges of criminally negligent homicide, reckless endangerment, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, resisting arrest and criminal possession of a controlled substance. The charges stem from the death of George P. Kempen, a Nassau County police officer, at the hands of Richard Kash, a Long Island State Parkway police officer, in Merrick on Nov. 14. It is alleged that Mr. Doran caused Police Officer Kash's gun to discharge while resisting arrest after an automobile chase. The bullet struck Police Officer Kempen.

5th Dies After Explosion

The explosion of the Chiclet chewing gum factory took its fifth victim when a 28-year-old Queens man died in a Pennsylvania burn center. His wife, also a victim of the fire, had died earlier. The new victim, Jose Murray, died at the Crozer-Chester hospital in Chester, Pa., where his wife, Inez, 29, succumbed on Monday. They left two infant girls, aged 1 and 3. The blast at the American Chiclet Company plant in Queens on Nov. 1 left 55 persons injured. Authorities have attributed the explosion to the ignition of a lubricant dust by a mechanical or electrical spark.

Thruway Pact Spurned

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway employees narrowly rejected a proposed three-year contract offer from the state. Under guidelines set up by the which counted all ballots not received as being in favor of the contract, the proposed pact was defeated 738 to 735. Roger Cole, a spokesman for the union, said, the actual count of ballots received in the mail poll showed a more than 6-to-2 rejection of the proposed contract with 728 opposed and 241 in favor of the pact. Mr. Cole said union officials had scheduled an emergency meeting Monday morning in Albany to evaluate the results of the voting.

OTB Security Tightened

To give added protection to employees of the Offtrack Betting Corporation and to discourage robbery attempts, time locks have been installed in all 156 OTB branch offices. Paul R. Scovano, OTB chairman and president, said that the time locks would be set so that branch-office vaults could not be opened "from some time before closing in the evening until some time after opening the following day." He said that the vaults also were equipped with alarms. Signs have been posted in all branch offices calling attention to the time-lock installations, he added.

Food Cart Blast Hurts 2

A police officer and a civilian were slightly injured in the explosion of a small propane cylinder on a food vending cart parked at 41 Kenmare Street, in lower Manhattan. The police said the civilian had been injured by debris from the explosion. The officer, who rushed from his post as a school crossing guard, was felled by gas fumes. Both were taken to Bellevue Hospital, where they were listed in good condition.

5 Held in Meat Theft

NEWARK, Dec. 3 (AP)—Five men have been indicted on Federal charges of stealing 900 cartons of meat, valued at $50,000, from a trailer here. John Bowen, an assistant United States attorney, said the five had been charged with stealing the meat on Feb. 8, 1974, from Roger's Transfer, a Newark shipping company. Named in the indictment were Norman Kahn, 49 years old, of Hillside; Stephen Rizzo, 47, of Mountainside; Thomas Catanzaro, 28, of Montville; James Micala, 34, of Livingston, and James Taylor, 29, of Lake Hiawatha.

Golden Quits City Council to Seek Borough Presidency in Brooklyn

By EDWARD RANZAL

Howard Golden resigned from the New York City Council today to "devote all of my efforts" to win the Democratic nomination next year for a full four-year term as Borough President of Brooklyn.

Mr. Golden, who heads the Roosevelt Democratic Club and had represented the Borough Park section of Brooklyn for almost seven years, is expected to be elected shortly by the 13-member Brooklyn Council delegation to a one-year interim term to complete the term of Sebastian Leone, the current Borough President, who was elected last month to State Supreme Court.

Mr. Leone, who will resign as Borough President on Dec. 31, will then be sworn in as a justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Golden's Council seat will be filled by a vote of the entire Council after the Brooklyn Democratic organization had recommended a successor.

Some City Hall observers were perplexed by Mr. Golden's decision to resign from the Council at this time. Close associates explained that he wanted to avoid any implication of a political deal as well as to head off any prospective candidates.

Blacks Seek Deputy Post

Meanwhile, an organization of black Democratic district leaders in Brooklyn, headed by Assemblyman Thomas R. Fortune, said they had obtained a commitment from Meade H. Esposito, the Brooklyn Democratic chairman, that the next appointed deputy borough president would be a black.

Councilman Samuel Wright, a member of the organization, said that Mr. Esposito wanted blacks to become more in-involved in local government and that he had suggested that the group recommend candidates for deputy borough president.

The organization submitted the names of three persons—all women and all co-district leaders. They are Evelyn Dixon of the Fort Greene and Bedford-Stuyvesant sections, Marcellus Frett of the Bedford-Stuyvesant and Bushwick sections and Jeannette Gadsden of the Brownsville and Ocean Hill sections.

William Howard, a vice president of the Metropolitan Savings Bank of Brooklyn and a close associate of Representative Shirley Chisholm, was also said to be seeking the deputy position.

Decision Was "Unorthodox"

The 51-year-old Mr. Golden, who was chairman of the Council's State Legislation Committee, has long been regarded as one of the more productive and hard-working Councilmen. He said that his decision to resign was "unorthodox," but that it had been reached after "a lot of soul-searching" with his family.

Mr. Golden said that he expected to devote his time until the Democratic primary to his law practice. He has been permitted, under City Charter rules, to continue his law practice while serving as a Councilman. However, as Borough President, he would have to give up his practice.

As a Councilman, Mr. Golden received $20,000 a year, plus $5,000 for expenses, plus $4,500 as chairman of the State Legislation Committee. He was elected in 1969 and took his seat in 1970. He was re-elected in 1974 for another four years. As Borough President he would receive $45,000 a year.

Large Number of Crime Suspects Knew Their Victims, Study Shows

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

A "startling" percentage of persons arrested for serious crimes in New York City had "prior, often close" relations with their victims, according to a study by the Vera Institute of Justice which will be published shortly.

"Prior relationships were frequent in cases of homicide and assault, where they were expected, as well as in cases of robbery, where they were not," the study found. In its sample, more than half of those arrested in cases of "interpersonal violence" had known their victims. "Even in property crimes," the study reported, "prior relationships figured in over a third of the cases."

Without specifically saying so, the report confirms a basic truism of law enforcement work: It is easier to apprehend a suspect when the victim previously knew him and can identify him.

Based on an analysis of the data they collected, Vera researchers speculated that people arrested on felony charges and processed through the criminal-justice system were not "representative" of those who commit felonies—crimes that carry a minimum sentence of one year in prison. This speculation led to the report's hypothesis that "the criminal-justice system is just not catching in its net the kind of criminals citizens worry about—the violent strangers."

Typically, the report found that suspects were not strangers to the victims. They were husbands or wives, lovers, neighbors, in-laws, narcotics addicts or dealers, landlords or tenants.

Once a suspect was arrested, the study found that the defendant and victim often became reconciled, leading the victim to drop the charges or to become an uncooperative witness.

This, then, helped to explain why criminal charges were so often dismissed or reduced in severity—twin phenomena that have never been adequately explained by crime and court researchers.

Another major finding of the study was that "defendants with heavier criminal histories were more likely to be convicted and, if convicted, more likely to receive heavier sentences than those with light or clean records."

By and large, the report concluded, "the dispositions appear rational and proportional to the seriousness of the offense, the defendant's criminal history and his relationship to the victim."

"If criminals are getting away with it," the report said, "they are getting away with it on the streets, not in the courtroom."

The research by Vera, a private, non-profit organization that engages in research into the criminal-justice system and begins its projects, was based on two samples. One was an analysis of court records for a sample of 1,888 cases out of 100,000 that were begun by arrests on felony charges, covering every major crime category in Brooklyn, Bronx, Manhattan and Queens in 1971.

The second part of the research involved a series of interviews with police officers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and judges involved in a sample of 369 arrests that reached disposition in 1973.

While acknowledging that this smaller sample—on which many of the report's conclusions are based—is not statistically valid, the researchers said they were satisfied that it was detailed enough to yield "ballpark" results. They also said that, while these cases were brought to court three or more years ago, recent court data indicate that the mixture of cases and the way in which they are handled remain much the same today.

In these interviews, prosecutors often mentioned prior relationships as their reasons for offering to reduce the charges and obtain light sentences in return for a guilty plea. Even more commonly, the study found, prior relationships led to dismissals. The most frequently cited reason for dismissals in such cases was the lack of cooperation by the complainants.

Case Was Not Pressed
For example, a woman tried to break up with a man. He came to her apartment and beat her up. They became reconciled and she refused to pursue the matter.

In another case, a woman complained that her sister and her sister's male friend had taken her purse and $40. Later, she said, it had all been a misunderstanding and she refused to press the case, which was then dismissed.

"At the root of much of this crime brought to court," the report concluded, "is a single or a few complicated angles between two people who know each other. Expression of anger results in the commission of technical felonies, yet defense attorneys, judges and prosecutors recognize that in many cases conviction and prison sentences are inappropriate responses."

The study recommends that options for processing grievances among friends and lovers be explored. It points approvingly to the dispute center set up in New York City by the Institute for Mediation and Conflict Resolution that offers mediation and arbitration as alternatives to arrest and criminal-court processes.

No Adequate Alternatives
But generally, the study concluded, "our society has not found adequate alternatives to arrest and adjudication for dealing with interpersonal anger publicly expressed." The congestion and "dead-end" resources caused by an excessive number of such cases in the courts weakens the ability of the criminal-justice system to deal quickly and decisively with the "real felons, who may be getting lost in the shuffle," it concluded.

The Vera study was prompted by a 1972 speech that Patrick V. Murphy, who then the Police Commissioner, made before the Association of the Bar of the City of New York in which he noted a "criminal rise in crime" and assigned to courts the "great share of the blame for it."

To support his charge, Mr. Murphy recounted the final dispositions in 136 arrests for felonious possession of hand guns. Not one person was convicted of a felony charge, and only 53 defendants received jail sentences.

In its chapter on illegal possession of guns, the Vera report found that, as in the sample Mr. Murphy alluded to, most of the charges were either reduced or dismissed. But contrary to Mr. Murphy's suggestions that leniency by judges and callous plea bargaining by prosecutors led to the "criminal rise in crime," the report found few cases in which—the facts of the situations and the evidentiary obstacles to felony conviction are explored—it could be said that the disposition was clearly too lenient or that the courthouse was "bargained away."

TRANSIT AUTHORITY WARNED ON PAY RISE

Financial Control Board Demands Proof of Productivity Savings Before Approving Increases

The New York State Emergency Financial Control Board warned yesterday that Transit Authority employees would be denied "cost-of-living adjustments" scheduled to take effect in Jan. 1 if the authority failed to provide proof of new savings from increased productivity.

At its regular meeting at Governor Carey's Manhattan office, the board directed the authority to produce "appropriate certification of productivity savings" by next Friday. Otherwise it will order a postponement of payment of the increase.

Stephen Berger, executive director of the Control Board, "seemed" to soften the effect of the board's action when he told reporters later that he and his colleagues had "no desire to withhold anything anyone has earned."

He said, "The basic information is the productivity savings have been made." But he emphasized that he needed to see firm evidence of the savings before he could recommend approval of the increase.

John G. de Ropp, senior executive officer of the Transit Authority, said he would submit the issue of an increase to a meeting of the authority's board, scheduled for next Monday, and would advise Mr. Berger after that "when we are ready to make certification."

On another matter important to the city's financial health, Thomas Appleby, the Housing and Development Administrator, reported substantial progress in arranging for the sale of Mitchell-Lama mortgages.

The city is counting on revenue from the mortgage sales—up to $350 million—to help reduce the city's budget deficit in the current fiscal year.

Earlier in the year, city budget officials had said there was some doubt over whether the mortgage sales could be arranged quickly enough to raise new revenues during the fiscal year that began last July.

But Mr. Appleby said yesterday that his department expected to sell at least six mortgages for $21.9 million sometime next month. In an interview afterward, Mr. Appleby said he thought it would be feasible to raise the full $350 million before next July.

Mr. Berger said there had been no discussion at yesterday's meeting of the city's plans to achieve additional savings of $500 million in order to balance its budget in the fiscal year starting next July. City officials are committed to doing, he said, how those savings would be achieved by Jan. 1.

Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation and a member of the Control Board, briefed his colleagues on the continuing effort to come up with a plan to deal with the court-ordered end to the city's year-old moratorium on payments to the holders of nearly a billion dollars in short-term notes.

Financially Straitened New York Awaiting the Inauguration of Carter

A lot of subway trains in New York City are still carrying those cards with Jimmy Carter's name on them that tell the people of the greatest city on earth to drop dead.

Those cards are a constant reminder to the city and state fiscal experts grappling with New York's newest financial crisis of an element they have never dealt with before—the impending inauguration of an avowedly sympathetic President.

For the last 18 months, there has been a more or less standard pattern to the fiscal crises of New York City. First, city and state officials turned to the banks and municipal-employee pension funds for new financial assistance. The banks and pension funds, however, have already over-committed to city securities, and suggest new Federal involvement.

Then, with bankruptcy sometimes only hours away—and everyone fearful of its consequences—the banks and pension funds agree to extend themselves one more time for the sake of the city.

In the two weeks since the State Court of Appeals voided the city's year-old moratorium on payments on $983 million in short-term notes, thereby forcing the city to come up with a repayment plan for the holders of the notes, the standard pattern has been followed. But some city financial experts are beginning to wonder whether Mr. Carter's election will change the final outcome.

Part of the uncertainty centers on just exactly what Mr. Carter's pledge means—and how best to take advantage of it.

Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, first considered the new crisis the excuse he had been looking for to get the Federal Government involved anew in the city's affairs, only to draw back from that position on the advice of Governor Carey.

The Governor suggested that the wiser political course would be to exhaust all local alternatives before turning to Washington for new aid.

Gothaum's Position
In the meantime, Victor Gotbaum, who is executive director of District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, has been moving in the opposite direction. He now insists that he will not endorse any solution to the moratorium problem of the Federal Government.

Mr. Rohatyn and Mr. Gotbaum are in agreement—so is nearly everyone else concerned with the city's finances—that some new form of Federal aid is necessary. They disagree only about whether that aid should be sought before or after the financing for the repayment of the holders of short-term notes has been accomplished.

While most attention during the last week has been focused on the moratorium, the city is really facing two serious fiscal problems in the immediate future. The other one is an impending budget gap for the fiscal year starting next July, now projected at $500 million.

To comply with the state and Federal laws that were passed to deal with last year's crisis, the city must close that gap and balance its budget.

A spokesman for the city's banks said yesterday that they had asked to meet with budget officials next week to get a briefing on the city's progress in cutting that gap. Bank officers have so far withheld comment on all other aspects of the negotiations.

Mr. Rohatyn may try to solve the two problems at once—in fact, solving them together may be the only way he can solve either one without additional Federal assistance.

The reason is this: To raise the money the city needs to pay off the holders of short-term notes, he must persuade the banks and pension funds to buy some kind of new M.A.C. or city-bond issue. But Jack Bigel, the chief consultant to the municipal-union pension trustees, has said that he sees "no possibility" of their buying any more bonds of any kind.

Conceivably, the union leaders might change their minds on this point if they knew that in return for their help with the moratorium problem, additional layoffs of municipal workers would be curtailed during the coming fiscal year.

But still another problem hanging in the background—reports of a new state deficit of $500 million or more—makes

A former country doctor, Patrick Hillery, was sworn in yesterday as the sixth President of the Irish Republic in a colorful ceremony at Dublin Castle. In Ireland's ancient Gaelic language, Dr. Hillery, a former Foreign Minister and Common Market commissioner, took the oath of office for a seven-year term. He succeeds Cearbhal Ó Dálaigh, who resigned last October after a political and constitutional squabble with Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave's coalition government over anticricket legislation. Dr. Hillery, a candidate of the Fianna Fail party, said after his swearing-in "I once wanted nothing but medicine, but when you are asked to be President of Ireland, you accept."

In the 45 years he has been in government, Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago said in a speech there, he has steadfastly withstood all temptation. "There is not one man or woman in this state or nation who has ever corrupted me," Mr. Daley said. "Many of them tried it. But you and I know that if I had ever been corrupted years ago I wouldn't still be around."

In Seattle, Bob Cummings, the former movie and television star, was sued for $100,000 by the telephone company, which contended that he used an illegal electronic device called a "blue box" to avoid paying for long distance telephone calls. The 66-year-old actor was arrested at an apartment house a year ago when the police raided the building in search of the blue box. The civil damage suit lodged by Pacific Northwest Bell charged that Mr. Cummings used the illegal device in 1974 and 1975 to make "quite a substantial number of telephone calls."

The prestigious American Academy of Arts and Letters has elected four new members, it was announced yesterday by John Hersey, the academy's secretary. They are Tennessee Williams, Elizabeth Bishop, John Updike and Howard Nemerov. Academy membership is limited to 50 artists, writers and composers. Mr. Williams joins Lillian Hellman and Arthur Miller among the dramatists. The election of the poet, Miss Bishop, brings to eight the number of women members of the academy.

In San Francisco, Gail Harris Getty sued her former husband, J. Paul Getty Jr., for his alleged failure to pay more than $160,000 into a trust fund for their four children. Mrs. Getty maintained that Mr. Getty, whose average income should be more than $5 million annually for the next few years, hasn't paid anything into the children's fund since 1967. One of the couple's children is J. Paul Getty 3d, who was kidnapped in Italy three additional years ago.

At Fordham University yesterday, a group of political heavyweights took some jobs at the office of the Vice Presidency. "I don't think a Vice President will ever be given a serious job by a President," said Arthur Schlesinger Jr., the historian. "It's a positively damaging office for those who hold it. A Vice President's only job is to wait around until the President dies."

Senator Birch Bayh, Democrat of Indiana, had this to say: "There is only one role for the vice President and that is presiding over the Senate. He isn't there very often, and he doesn't contribute very much when he is." Even the Senate job is one the Vice President shouldn't have, said Senator Robert P. Griffin, Republican from Michigan. "That is a useless function that is only confusing," he said. "It detracts from the likelihood that the President will give him meaningful responsibilities in the executive branch."

That inveterate yachtsman, Edward Heath, former Prime Minister of Britain, has sold his Morning Cloud, a 13-meter craft with an aluminum hull, to a Belgian yachtsman, Albert Moorhous. The yacht will be renamed the Phantom II, as Mr. Heath retains the "Morning Cloud" name as his exclusive property. The yacht just sold replaced the Morning Cloud III, which sank in September 8, 1974 with the loss of two crewmen. Mr. Heath is having a fifth Morning Cloud built and plans to enter it in competition.

Liberal Democratic Party rally in Tokyo yesterday, 36 hours before the vote begins in the important national house elections. But despite a perky handshake and forced smiles, empty the leaders share a refusal stay beneath the surface. "After elections" said Mr. Fukuda, who is to oust his fellow conservative, "I reform the party." Then he introduced Mr. Miki, who said sharply: "Here's Fukuda introducing me. I don't see any introduction. I'm the leader of party."

While a student of St. Michael's, he was a member of priestly circles and the Church of St. Michael's, he said that he is totally committed to "Catholic theology and Catholic renewal."

For the fourth year in a row, members of the Elvis Presley Fan Club from Great Britain, France, the Netherlands and West Germany have made pilgrimage to the birthplace of the idol in Tupelo, Miss. About 200 of faithful this week swarmed through small frame home under the eye of Todd Slaughter, the Presley Club spokesman. The trips to Tupelo, said Slaughter, "cut down the Elvis fanism and concentrate on having a time." He added: "Ten years ago, I was a pseudoreligious atmosphere meant you would bow down to him times a day and scream. Oh Elvis! wouldst thou Elysis and the Queen of same time."

JOBLESS RATE IS 8.1% HIGHEST OF THE YEAR

jobholders and job-seekers, also a new high, the job-seekers were 8.1 percent. Alan Greenspan, chief economic adviser to President Ford, said he saw signs in the report that industrial production expanded in November after declines in September and October.

Mr. Greenspan said that he saw portents of such a rebound in the growth of 260,000 in nonfarm payroll employment, in hours worked and in average weekly earnings, which rose by 1.3 percent. This last figure, Mr. Greenspan said, pointed to the likelihood of a November gain in real earnings, after allowing for higher consumer prices, to be calculated later this month in the Consumer Price Index.

A Statistical Fluke
On the other hand, analysts at the Bureau of Labor Statistics said the reported increase in total employment of 357,000 appeared to be exaggerated by a statistical fluke. The analysts noted that this rise included a climb of 220,000 in nonfarm self-employment, a change that was too large to be plausible and that was traced to technical statistical problems.

The 8.1 percent jobless rate was the highest this year, but higher, at 8.5 percent, in November 1975, just before the rate began dropping to a low in May of 7.5 percent. From July through October, as the economic recovery slipped into a "pause" that Mr. Greenspan has acknowledged as longer and deeper than he had expected, the jobless rate remained at 7.8 to 7.9 percent.

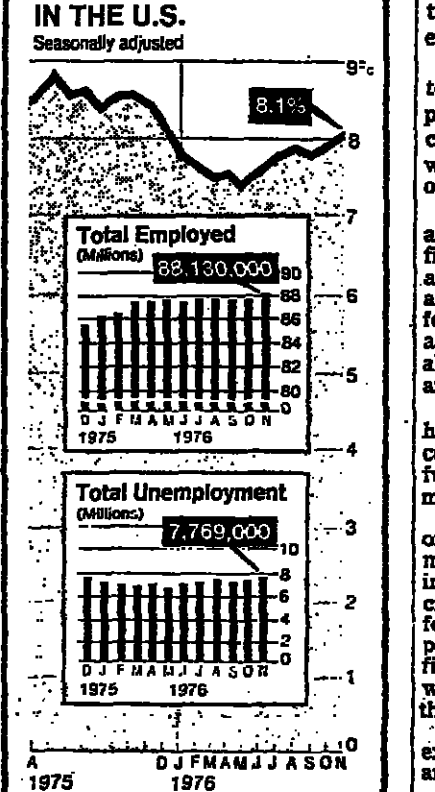

"Most of the November increase in unemployment occurred among adult men," the report said. "Their jobless rate edged up 0.2 of a percentage point to 6.5 percent, the third such increase in as many months. Their unemployment rate was also at its highest point of the year."

The jobless rates for adult women, teen-agers, whites and blacks showed little change. The 13.6 percent rate for blacks was almost twice the 7.4 percent for whites, as has been the case for some time. Similarly, the rate for teen-agers, black and white, was 19 percent, almost double the rate for adults.

High Rate of Job Loss
The number of persons who were unemployed because they had lost their last job rose for 147,000 to 3,925,000, the highest level this year and 490,000 above the May low. The report noted that the fact appeared to be related to the higher unemployment rate for adult men, analysts said.

Also counted as unemployed are persons who quit their last jobs, persons looking for their first jobs and persons who re-entered the labor force after a period of idleness.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE U.S.

The New York Times, Dec. 4, 1976

The number of persons working part time involuntarily rose again in November to 3.6 million, up 600,000 from July. George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, said that taking account of involuntary part-time workers and those too discouraged to seek jobs, the "realistic" jobless total was 10.5 million for November, or 10.9 percent of the labor force.

The civilian labor force grew by a large 560,000 in November to 95.9 million, making growth for the preceding 12 months 2.9 million. That was more than a million above the expected growth, a bureau analyst said.

The bureau traced this large rise to another advance in the employment rate of adult women, which has been increasing for decades. In November, 474 of every 1,000 women of working age were in the labor force, as against 461 in November 1975.

Mr. Greenspan said that growth of the labor force, particularly the entry of women of child-bearing age, had been greater than could be explained by economic trends alone.

He acknowledged that to some extent there had been necessary job-seeking by wives or other "second workers" in families squeezed by inflation or unemployment or both, but he insisted that the rapid growth of the labor force was also explained in part by "the cultural revolution related to women."

Detective Says Carter's Story Conflicted With Artis

Special to The New York Times
PATERNON, N.J., Dec. 3—Rubin (Hurricane) Carter's statement to the police about his whereabouts on the night of a triple murder in a bar here 10 years ago conflicted with the statement of his co-defendant, John Artis, a chief of detectives testified today during their second trial in the crime.

Vincent J. DeSimone Jr., chief of Passaic County detectives, who, as a lieutenant, led the investigation of the murders at the Lafayette Bar and Grill on June 17, 1966, took the stand to read reports he made after interviewing both defendants separately about seven hours after the murders.

The alleged variations concerned the accuracy of the notes he took in questioning the two men.

"Did you go back and forth and finally write down what you wanted?" Myron Beldock, the lawyer for Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis, demanded of the witness, who has been accused by the defense of engineering the convictions of Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis.

"I don't write down what I want," Mr. DeSimone answered, looking at the jury. "I write down what I hear."

Both Mr. Beldock and Lewis Steel, the lawyer for Mr. Artis, addressed the fact that the defendants had not been to bed that night, having been in custody from about 3 A.M. to the time of their interviews. They had also been drinking.

Mr. DeSimone said, referring to Mr. Artis, whom he said had obviously been drinking. "The detective said, 'when he, the detective, entered the interrogation room where Mr. Artis had been waiting for several hours."

Chief DeSimone testified that he had advised the defendants of their rights and that both were cooperative in questioning.

"I don't need a lawyer; I use my fists—I don't use guns," he quoted Mr. Carter, a former boxer, as having said.

"I didn't do anything—I don't need a whites at the Lafayette bar in retaliation for that earlier shooting.

Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis were released from prison earlier this year after the State Supreme Court ruled that Passaic County law-enforcement authorities had apparently suppressed evidence favorable to the defendants in their first trial. The defendants had served nine years of their life sentences.

Detective Is Challenged
Chief DeSimone was challenged on the accuracy of the notes he took in questioning the two men.

"Did you go back and forth and finally write down what you wanted?" Myron Beldock, the lawyer for Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis, demanded of the witness, who has been accused by the defense of engineering the convictions of Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis.

"I don't write down what I want," Mr. DeSimone answered, looking at the jury. "I write down what I hear."

Both Mr. Beldock and Lewis Steel, the lawyer for Mr. Artis, addressed the fact that the defendants had not been to bed that night, having been in custody from about 3 A.M. to the time of their interviews. They had also been drinking.

Mr. DeSimone said, referring to Mr. Artis, whom he said had obviously been drinking. "The detective said, 'when he, the detective, entered the interrogation room where Mr. Artis had been waiting for several hours."

Chief DeSimone testified that he had advised the defendants of their rights and that both were cooperative in questioning.

"I don't need a lawyer; I use my fists—I don't use guns," he quoted Mr. Carter, a former boxer, as having said.

"I didn't do anything—I don't need a

Mr. Gotbaum skeptical of any city promises.

"The city giving us a guarantee of no layoffs means nothing," Mr. Gotbaum said. "The only way the state can make up its deficit is by taking it out of the city's hide—we don't know the parameters of the city's deficit."

In other words, an agreement among the unions, the banks, and the city, might still be worth nothing, in Mr. Gotbaum's view, if new cuts in state aid to localities forced the city into a new round of layoffs.

Richenthal's "Atom Bomb"
"Every group has different problems," said Mr. Rohatyn. "The banks have problems in terms of their commitments" to M.A.C. and city bonds. "The unions have problems in terms of the size of their commitments and the sacrifices their members have already made, and Richenthal has the problem that he's won a great victory—and he holds an atom bomb in his hand."

The reference was to Arthur Richenthal, the lawyer for the Flushing National Bank who brought the suit that led to the end of the moratorium. The "atom bomb" holds, in Mr. Rohatyn's view, is the threat to drive the city into bankruptcy mandating immediate cash repayment of the $983 million the city now owes.

However, Mr. Richenthal's power, that is clearly limited by the Co Appeals decision, which specified the Flushing National Bank was not to demand "extraordinary measures" would be "unacceptably disruptive of the city's delicate financial and economic

It is up to Mr. Richenthal to do a proposal to the Court of Appeals, short-term notes to be repaid. Mr. Rohatyn has agreed to work with state and city officials, with a tentative of coming up with a joint order submitted to the Court by Dec. 15.

But submission of the proposal is postponed, if Mr. Richenthal concedes and the whole problem might not be resolved before Jan. 20. If that is the case, President Carter will get the subway car cards, and perhaps the what Mayor Beane and Governor DeWine are really gambling on.

A key point seized upon by the defense was the statement by Mr. Carter that two of the people who saw him in Nite Spot hours before the murders, Catherine McGuire and her mother, Mrs. Mapee.

Both women testified at the first trial that Mr. Carter was driving them from that bar at the time of the murders. In this trial, they have testified that they had earlier testimony, having been asked to do so by Mr. Carter's lawyer that time, Raymond Brown.

In the statement presented to the court today, Mr. Carter did not speak of driving the women home, and spoke of seeing them at an earlier point than was stated at the last trial.

Mondale Again Promises to Try To Prevent Closing of Arsenal

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3 (UPI)—President-elect Walter F. Mondale repeated his pledge that he will do his best to keep open the Frankford Arsenal in Philadelphia after Jimmy Carter comes President.

In a statement yesterday, Senator Mondale said he was "very disappointed" that relocation notices have been issued to the employees of the arsenal. "I have publicly pledged to try to keep the Frankford Arsenal open," he said. "These notices make this commitment difficult to fulfill. I will certainly do my best after Jan. 20 to keep the arsenal open."

The Minnesota Democrat said he had been authorized "to state that the administration, when it takes office, will fully review the matter of the Frankford Arsenal relocation."

'Mom and Pop' Groceries Dying Under Competition

By ROMA CHERRY
For 23 years, Albert Rainaldi and his wife, Pasqualina, have owned and operated a small corner grocery a few miles east of downtown Pittsburgh. After 23 years, they have come to regret their regular customers almost as part of the family. But now Mr. Rainaldi says that he has decided to call it quits. "There's no future in this business," he asserts. For years, many small grocers have been saying the same thing. Competition from large supermarkets has made their lives difficult, and many of the tiny groceries—often called "mom and pop" stores because they are usually family-owned—have bowed to the pressure. Now they are reeling under new competition, from the increasingly popular convenience stores, such as 7-Eleven and Cumberland Farms, which seem likely to force mom and pop stores to close. To be sure, some of the stores are managing to survive and even flourish. They are often run by members of minority groups, eager to get started in American business, and cater to specific ethnic neighborhoods. Where once the small grocery

Industrial Average Inches Up 3.91 —Stock Resurgence Linked to Change in Tax-Loss Selling

By VARTAN G. VARTAN
A firm tone, reflecting a new sense of optimism in Wall Street, prevailed in the stock market yesterday as the broad list of issues performed better than the popular Dow Jones industrial average. The Dow, showing steady but not dynamic strength during the busy season, moved up 3.91 points to close at 950.55. Meanwhile, advancing issues on the New York Stock Exchange outnumbered the decliners by a 2-to-1 ratio. Thus the market appeared to bear out an observation by Robert J. Farrell, who heads the market analysis department at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith. He has suggested "a secondary stock resurgence over the next several weeks," partly as a result of some changes in late 1976 affecting the traditional tax-loss selling by investors. Yesterday, the depressed drug group advanced, along with bank, electronic, oil and technology issues. I.R.M., repeating its recent pattern, established the general direction for stock prices. It rose 2 1/2 points to 271 1/2. Leading the rebound in the drug group was Johnson & Johnson, up 2 1/4 to 75 1/2. But SmithKline, the best performing drug stock of this year, dropped 3 1/2 points to 73 1/2. Earlier this week, more than a half-dozen giant drug issues sank to their lowest prices of 1976. Producing a better tone in this sector yesterday, some brokers noted, was an article in the December issue of Fortune magazine devoted to "a multitude of potential new medicines." But the stock market also had its share of spectacular losers yesterday. Holly Sugar fell 4 points to 30 1/2, after trading at its lowest price of 1976. The company reduced its quarterly dividend to 60 cents from 85 cents, citing continued lower selling prices for refined sugar. Lykes, a steel producer and operator of a shipping cargo-line service, dropped 2 1/2 to 13 1/2. The company reduced its quarterly dividend and also said it expected an operating loss for the fourth quarter. In the news background, the Govern-

Speer Says Steel Rise Will Have A Very Minor Effect on Economy

By GENE SMITH
Edgar B. Speer, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, said yesterday that only the marketplace would determine if the $6-a-ton increase on sheet and strip steel would hold. Mr. Speer insisted, after a luncheon appearance at the New York Society of Security Analysts in the Bankers Club at 120 Broadway, that the steel price increase would have "an extremely minor effect on the economy." The executive appeared exasperated at some of the questions at a news conference and described most of the criticism for the pricing action as "pretty much off the top of the heads of the critics." "We were making an effort to have a reasonable cost-price relationship," he said. "We have to be able to produce products so that the investing public will keep backing our industry." Mr. Speer accused one questioner of being a Monday morning quarterback. "If you think that this was not the right time to raise prices," he said, "the steel industry, he said, took no pricing actions when the automobile industry was "flat on its back." "Now, they can afford these higher prices and we're trying to make up for our production costs, which rose 14 to 15 percent during that period," he said. See Effect From Imported Steel In reply to a question from a security analyst, Mr. Speer said he felt there was no question but that imported steel will take a run at the flat-rolled product consumers. He added that this could have "a significant effect on whether the prices will hold." To another question he replied: "I think (President-elect Jimmy) Carter's position was very wise in not meeting with steel industry executives at this time. Earlier, Mr. Carter had said at Plains, Ga., in an interview on NBC's "Today" show that the steel industry "missed a tremendous opportunity to help me as a future President." He said that refraining from a price increase "would have been a sign that the business community is willing to make a sacrifice." Later in the day, Mr. Carter, expressing the fear that the threat of price and wage con-

SALES OF NEW CARS SHOW STRONG GAINS IN NOV. 21-30 PERIOD

RISE FROM '75 PUT AT 20.85% Increase Also Sharp Improvement From Earlier in the Month and From October

Special to The New York Times
DETROIT, Dec. 3—New-car sales improved 20.8 percent in the final third of November from the same period last year. Analysts had been reporting a flat auto market since the 1977 model year started in October. But the Nov. 21-30 sales reports showed a strong gain from earlier in the month, and from October. The sales in the final third of November were up 23 percent from the Nov. 11-20 selling rate and were 40 percent ahead of the Nov. 1-10 rate. The selling rate for the full month of November was up 3 percent from October. "We are relieved by these figures because they indicate Ford is coming back and the market is picking up again," one analyst said. The annual selling rate for domestic cars in November increased to 8.2 million from a 7.8 million rate in October. However, analysts said that the Ford Motor Company strike reduced the selling rate by 500,000 cars last month. "Domestic sales should have been at an 8.7 million rate, plus 1.5 million imports—a 10.2 million total rate," said one analyst. Actual sales for the full year are expected to total 10.2 million, with the same import-domestic breakdown. "The strike is still holding down the market somewhat," said one analyst. Better Than First Two Periods Ford reported that sales were off 5.1 percent for the final period of the month. But that is an improvement over the first two periods of November, when sales were off 13 percent. Ford's sales for the full month were off 11 percent but company officials have said they expect to complete their comeback this month, with December sales topping the year-ago levels. Bennett E. Bidwell, sales group vice president at Ford, said, "Our late Novem-

City's Retail Volume in November Up Only 1.9% After October Surge

In the city and 10.4 percent in the metropolitan area, resumed the trend of erratic sales that marked summer and fall throughout September. "In the city, the same stores had average sales declines from a year before of 1.4 percent in July, 5.3 percent in August and 7.4 percent in September. In the area, stores were even with last year in July, 6.3 percent behind in August and 1 percent ahead in September. Despite a generally more promotional nature in recent months, the city's and area's retail business has been adversely affected by still high unemployment and continuing inflation, merchants said. Some indicated that the Thanksgiving Day weekend, which marked the onset of the Christmas shopping season, did not produce the expected level of business despite the widening trend of Sunday operations. After a strong start, November's retail sales fell 1.9 percent from October's gains of 8.6 percent

It also reported an increase of 0.6 percent in the Wholesale Price Index for November—a figure that works out to a rate of 7.2 percent a year. But what appeared to buoy the sentiments of Wall Street was a statement by President-elect Jimmy Carter that he had no intention of asking Congress for stand-by authority to impose wage and price controls. The threat of such controls, analysts agree, would have sent stock prices downward. British Petroleum, the most active issue, added 1/2 to 12 1/2 after reporting higher quarterly profits. Time Inc. rose 1 1/2 to 33 1/2 after trading at a new yearly high. Management has predicted record earnings for this year. Federated Department Stores, up 1/4 to 48 1/2, raised its dividend. Earnings of Major Airlines Gain, But Analysts Are Split on Outlook

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
The nation's major airlines will end 1976 with considerably higher earnings than projected earlier this year. In a striking turnaround from last year's combined loss of $105 million, industry officials and analysts are looking for profits totaling $300 million to $350 million on revenues of $13 billion. The reversal is largely attributable to the recoveries staged by three of the 11 trunk carriers—Trans World Airlines, Eastern Air Lines and American Airlines. Together they lost $156 million in 1975. This year they are heading for an estimated $125 million gain—a turnaround of more than $250 million. Illustrated by Statements But there is not much cheering. Uncertainty clouds the future. Uncertainty over the economy, future fuel price increases, the gargantuan capital appetites of the airlines and Federal efforts to ease Government regulation and throw the industry open to more competition. ber sales rate was the best" since the United Automobile Workers union began its strike of Sept. 14. "With Ford sales moving back toward normal levels, we should see moderate but definite increases in industrywide sales in December and the early months of 1977," he added. The General Motors Corporation reported a 39 percent sales increase for the period and 16 percent for the month. William J. Suxton, sales vice president of G.M., said: "The $200 cash bonus program continues to generate additional interest in the Vega, Chevette and Astra. Sales of these three car lines as a group during the final 20 days of November were considerably higher than the final 20 days of the preceding month." The subcompact cars have not been selling well and this is why there are $200 rebates on them. Chevrolet's general manager, Robert D. Lund, said sales of the Vega and Chevette were up 48 percent. Personal Investing Insurance for Money in Mutual Funds

By RICHARD PHALON
The mutual fund industry may have come up with the ultimate weapon in its battle to keep disenchanted stockholders from cashing in their shares. It is the chronically high levels of the last 15 months—a guarantee that investors cannot lose money. The guarantee comes in the form of an insurance policy, it provides that any long-term investor who buys the coverage and stays with a fund for a minimum of 10 years will get back at least as much money as he put in. The program has some fairly tight restrictions, and it may prove more useful to mutual fund managers than to investors, but the money-back guarantee does have a certain amount of charm. "It is a guarantee almost anyone who put money into mutual funds from 1972 to now would have been delighted to have. In the decidedly dicey climate that has prevailed since 1972, only a handful of mutual fund managers have been consistently able to outperform the market. Disappointed investors have retaliated by redeeming their shares. Those three groups alone control more than $3 billion worth of assets and the appeal of the IMF program, at least in part, seems to be its value as a sales tool. "Often the prospect doesn't take the insurance," Mr. Harris said, "but it's a great opener. The salesman can say, 'I've got a good long-term investment on which I can absolutely insure

New Orleans Bank Is Ordered Closed

Special to The New York Times
NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 3—The International City Bank & Trust Company, which reported about $162 million in deposits as of June 30, was closed today by Louisiana banking officials because of a "capital deficiency" and placed under the receivership of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The 10-year-old bank which had experienced three major changes in ownership since late 1974, is the fifth largest bank to fail during the existence of the F.D.I.C., according to a spokesman at the agency's office in Washington. Kenneth E. Pickering, Louisiana Commissioner of Financial Institutions, said that he decided to close the bank after business hours today "as a result of its deficiency in capital, which resulted in an unsafe, unsound and insolvent institution." He declined to elaborate on the causes for the bank's failure. Takeover Negotiations Started Mr. Pickering said that F.D.I.C. officials were negotiating with representatives of larger New Orleans banks in an effort to have one of them take over the assets and liabilities of the International City Bank—the sixth largest in New Orleans—so that its branches could possibly open for business as early as Monday. Efforts to reach F.D.I.C. officials conducting the negotiations were unsuccessful late tonight. If no such purchase and assumption transaction can be arranged, the F.D.I.C. will begin to pay off creditors up to the

A Computer That Talks Back

By STACY V. JONES

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—Industry is increasingly storing information in computer memories and would like to get it in clearly spoken words.

James L. Flanagan was granted Patent 3,995,116 this week for what is called an emphasis-controlled speech synthesizer.

Dr. Flanagan explained in a telephone interview that the technique is to store in a computer a vocabulary of human spoken words.

"The words are to be assembled in a message length," he said. "To obtain a reasonably natural sounding reply, it is necessary to modify the pitch, the intensity and the duration of the words constituting the message."

The patent technique accomplishes this modification and control by representing the vocabulary words in terms of acoustic features.

Dr. Flanagan says the ability of computers to communicate with man in natural language—both to speak and listen—is expected to expand over the next several years.

partment of Health, Education and Welfare.

Robert I. Henkin of Bethesda, Md., and Eugene L. Giroux of Strasbourg, France, were granted Patent 3,985,031 this week. The patent, which grows in the form of a shrub, yields ripe red berries from December to June.

The plant is purified by a chemical process. The product is held in the mouth for at least two minutes and provides a sweetening effect for from 10 minutes to three hours so that low caloric value foodstuffs will taste satisfyingly sweet.

Power From Pressure At Bottom of the Sea

Apparatus for generating power at the sea bottom, based on the great pressure of water at such levels, was patented this week for the Cooper Union Research Foundation, New York.

Patent 3,994,134 was granted to Steven L. Molnar, a research associate at the foundation, part of Cooper Union College. The project includes future construction of equipment to be placed at great depth, with an internal space in which normal pressure is created and pumping equipment operated by the admission of water under the high pressure natural at that level.

A high-pressure water line is fitted with a spray for cleaning the inside of the tank, which may be of the chemical reactor type. A platform made of folding sections may be attached to the base of the cage to provide a larger work area.

A New Electron Gun Sharpens Color TV

An electron gun patented this week is described as an advanced picture tube component that significantly improves the sharpness and detail of color television pictures.

The Zenith Radio Corporation, Chicago, received Patent 3,995,194, assigned by the inventors, Allen P. Blurker and James W. Schwartz, research and development engineers. The invention is currently used in four of the company's 19-inch diagonal basic color television models.

The gun is trademarked EFL-10. It indicates its extended focus field length. Karl Horn, senior vice president in charge of engineering and research, has said the gun concentrates the electron beam to produce a spot size much smaller than is possible with conventional systems.

Gamble Elects Two; Another Director Resigns

A former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission and a retired New York banker were elected to the board of Gamble-Skogmo Inc. yesterday at a special meeting in Minneapolis in which another director resigned, the fifth to do so in a month.

Named to the board were William J. Casey, 63 years old, chairman of the S.E.C. from 1971 to 1972 and now a lawyer with the New York firm of Rogers and Wells, and George S. Moore, former chairman of First National City Corporation and Citibank.

The New York Times Associated Press. George S. Moore, William J. Casey.

Meanwhile, Bernard Zients, one of two other outside directors on the 15-man board, resigned by letter from the merchandising company. Neither he nor the new directors attended yesterday's special meeting.

Mr. Zients' resignation followed a month of turmoil in which the chairman of Gamble, Edwin Gamble, requested and received the resignations of three directors and in which two other directors, one the chairman of the audit committee, also resigned.

sought out as directors in an effort to bolster the number of independent outsiders on the board, so that a committee of directors could investigate allegations made about Mr. Gamble by two of the resigning directors.

Among the allegations made by the resigning directors were that Mr. Gamble had been making private deals, which could have been material and therefore required public disclosure.

The president of Citibank, William L. Spencer, took a generally cheerful view of the United States economic scene yesterday.

cent in November from October, and percent ahead of last November. James Vorhes, Pontiac division sales manager, said the rebate program was working so well with the Astra by early January "we will have sold off our stock of 1976 models."

Both Mr. Vorhes and Mr. Lund there were no plans to continue the rebates, which are scheduled to end 10. They will have accomplished their purpose by then," Mr. Vorhes said. The past model inventory gain and a 1977 model established, it doesn't any need to continue them."

The American Motors Corporation, having trouble selling small cars, said $283 price cut on the Gremlin and rebate on the Pacer was helping sales of those cars.

Eugene V. Amoroso, A.M.C.'s president for marketing, said: "General sales in November increased 32 percent over October. During the last 20 days of November, Pacer sales increased 61 percent over the October period before rebate."

However, overall A.M.C. sales for period were down 12.8 percent from year ago, they were off 24.4 percent the full month.

The Chrysler Corporation reported 14.2 percent increase in sales for the third of the month and 9 percent for of November. Chrysler Highest Since 1968.

R.K. Brown, executive vice president for North American automotive divisions at Chrysler, said sales of cars carrying the Chrysler name were the highest for a November since 1968, totaling 23,536.

Sales of the Volare and Aspen 33 percent ahead of Chrysler's cars a year ago, when it was selling Valiant and Dart. However, the company has had to cut back Aspen-Volare production in recent weeks because of inventory problems.

"Industry compact sales are not as fast as we expected them to be but this month should improve as we get into the model year," Mr. Brown said. Import sales were up 30 percent a month and foreign cars accounted 14.2 percent of the United States market against 11.8 percent a year ago.

Volkswagen, the West German plant that has been in a sales slump for months, reported a 17.5 percent month compared with 11.8 percent in October. "Happy days are here again," quipped one company executive who added "November sales were up 33 percent in October."

With import sales of 119,000 last month and domestic sales of 720,772, total sales were 839,772, compared with 742,979 a year earlier, when domestic sales were 654,979 and imports 88,000. Following are sales reported by the domestic companies:

Personal Investing: Fund Money Can Be Guaranteed by Insurance

Continued From Page 31. of the face value of an investment and are paid by the investor, along with administrative costs of 0.2 percent a year.

The insurance can be bought only for terms of 10, 12 1/2, or 15 years and can be tailored to fit either single or installment investments.

The combination of premiums, administrative costs and standard mutual fund sales charges can take a sizable chunk out of capital.

On a minimum $3,000 single payment investment insured for 10 years, for example, the total premiums paid ($180), the total administrative costs ($60) and an 8.5 percent commission ($255) would leave a stockholder with only $2,505, actually at work, not counting dividends and capital gains taken in additional shares.

In practice, only the sales commission comes off the top immediately, the insurance premiums and administrative costs are calculated on a level monthly basis over the full term of the plan and deducted from capital gains and dividend distributions.

There is a certain amount of capital shrinkage, though, which explains why only long-term investors need apply. All dividends must be plowed back into the fund, which means a sacrifice of current income.

Further, if an investor pulls his shares out of a fund before the policy term ends, he loses both the insurance protection and the right to any reimbursement on the premiums he has paid.

Reimbursement of the premiums is one of the consolation prizes a stockholder can look forward to if the net asset value of his investment at the end of the term has fallen below the amount of money he put in to begin with.

The policy is designed, first of all, to make up that difference and covers the other out-of-pocket costs as well—premiums, administrative costs and sales charge.

The advantages from the point of view of the fund manager and the insurance company are clear enough. The IMF program—to the degree it binds investors to the fund for a period of

Yields on State Mining Rules

ENNE, Wyo., Dec. 3 (AP)—In a move hailed by Interior Secretary S. Kleppe as a states' rights victory, the Federal Government yesterday agreed to give mining claimants precedence over coal-mining standards for coal-mining lands.

The agreement, which was reached after a series of negotiations with Gov. Edwin Edwards, Mr. Kleppe said, will serve as a model for other coal-mining states in the Rocky Mountain region.

State Processing First

As familiar with the negotiations as the state and the Department of the Interior, Mr. Kleppe said, the agreement had been reached in spite of opposition from middle-level Federal officials and Mr. Kleppe had personally intervened in favor of the settlement.

The agreement ends a dispute that had lasted since District Court suits filed in June to challenge the constitutionality of new Interior Department rules that allowed the Federal Government to override state law in some cases, or the stipulation and consent of the Interior Department agreed that coal leases must comply with laws and regulations regarding mining, regardless of what action the Department of Interior has taken in approving the lessee's mining plan.

Mr. Kleppe and Mr. Herschler said that all Federal coal mining permits would be processed by the state and would then be submitted to the Interior Secretary for his approval.

Mr. Kleppe said that he could foresee no circumstance under which the Interior Secretary would reject a plan approved by the state.

"It was my conclusion as Secretary that all doubts should be resolved in favor of the state," Mr. Kleppe said.

"Under the agreement, governmental red tape and duplication will be minimized, and the primary responsibility of the state for administration and enforcement of reclamation laws will be emphasized."

Duplicate security bonds, applications and enforcement actions will be eliminated under the agreement, Mr. Kleppe and Mr. Herschler said.

Mr. Kleppe said that the Interior Department was ready to negotiate settlements with any other states with reclamation laws as stringent as or more stringent than Wyoming's.

Sources familiar with the negotiations said that several middle level officials in the Bureau of Land Management and the Department of the Interior had opposed the provisions of the negotiated settlement, prompting Mr. Kleppe to direct his subordinates to work towards a negotiated settlement.
